WHY THE WORLD LANGUAGE DICTIONARY?

The World Language Dictionary is presented as a major innovation of the present century in dictionary publishing.

It was in 1730 that Nathan Bailey of England produced the forefather of the modern English dictionary. That of Dr. Samuel Johnson appeared in 1755. The first American Dictionary of the English Language, edited by Noah Webster, was published in 1828. The series of successively improved editions of Funk & Wagnalls New Practical Standard Dictionary dates back to 1893 when the first Standard Dictionary was completed.

Through the years American dictionaries followed the pattern established by their English ancestors, limiting themselves largely to words of the English language. They have, however, been noted for their compactness and have been edited for the general public rather than largely for use by scholars. Thus, the American dictionary has become an educational tool used by everyone.

With radio providing an almost instantaneous means of communication and the airplane permitting travel between countries within a comparatively few hours' time, it was felt that the old-type dictionaries had become insufficient for family needs.

This special edition of Funk & Wagnalls New Practical Standard Dictionary meets these new requirements. It represents a new approach to an understanding of not English alone but of other principal languages of the Western world. This is a dictionary in three parts:

PART I—The complete Funk & Wagnalls New Practical Standard Dictionary of the English language (read, also, pages vii to xi of this Introduction).

PART II—The equivalents of commonly used English words in six different languages: French, German, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, and Yiddish. Special material includes alphabets, cardinal and ordinal numbers, days of the week, months of the year and common first names.

PART III—Six sections, one for each of the six languages, each in alphabetical order, with a new and greatly simplified indication of pronunciation; also for each language is the same special material as in Part II. In addition, there is a list of useful expressions, a grammar section and a detailed key to pronunciation for each of the six languages.

Parts II and III are the new sections representing, the publishers believe, an innovation which will make the Dictionary a greatly improved educational tool for family and office use. These two parts have been prepared under the general supervision of the editorial staff of Encyclopædia Britannica.

This new-type Dictionary is not intended to make it possible for its users to speak fluently in other languages. It does give them the opportunity to translate the English word or expression into the other languages, or vice versa. It will enable them to pronounce words of the unfamiliar languages understandably and with confidence. No longer is it necessary for the reader to skip over the increasing number of words and phrases in unfamiliar languages which he comes across in books, magazines and newspapers.

It seems evident that this Britannica World Language Dictionary can be of immediate use to anyone in the home or in the business house who is interested in languages. Such use, it is hoped, will stimulate many to undertake formal courses in the study of other languages.

There are about one thousand written languages and dialects in the world. Quite evidently this new reference work could not deal with all of these. Accordingly, the editorial staff of Encyclopædia Britannica selected those languages believed to be most often encountered by English-speaking citizens of the Western world.

The selection of the six languages other than English included in Parts II and III was, therefore, by no means arbitrary. These six with English represent the most widely used languages of the Western world, spoken by some 625,000,000 persons. It is to be expected that some scholars and critics will question the omission of one or another additional language; but it seems safe to say that they can hardly question the inclusion of these six. Obvious space and cost difficulties make it impossible to deal with all languages of interest to individual users of such a dictionary as this.

The Britannica World Language Dictionary is based upon a word list carefully selected from among the English words most frequently in use today. This list was prepared by consultants familiar with established word-frequency studies and represents a typical vocabulary. The entire reference work is designed to show, in a fashion that can readily be understood, the six language equivalents of these words.

In further explanation of Part II, the arrangement is alphabetical by English words. To simplify the use of this list, pronunciation of the word equivalents in the six other languages is not given in Part II. For pronunciation, the user will refer to the desired other-language section of Part III. Here he will find the translated words in their proper alphabetical arrangement: French to English; German to English; Italian to English; Spanish to English; Swedish to English; and Yiddish to English.

Since almost everyone today is interested in what is taking place in all parts of the world, as no previous generation has been, it is the hope of the publishers that this new type of dictionary will make some contribution for world understanding—and peace.

ROBERT C. PREBLE

THE PLAN OF THE DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

This dictionary is intended to serve the general needs of all English-speaking adults. Among modern dictionaries it is a departure with an aim at thorough practicality. To achieve that aim all the conventions that have grown up around dictionary-making have been carefully reexamined. Only those that are of practical value have been retained, and these have been reformed and strengthened with new ideas to make a modern book, efficient in every detail.

The book is based on the Funk & Wagnalls New "Standard" Dictionary. It offers, however, a new form and much wholly new material hitherto unrecorded in any general dictionary. The method adopted in the presentation of the material differs notably from that of the larger work, for the aim of the editor has been the greatest possible simplicity—a simplicity which, with no sacrifice in accuracy or adequacy of statement, would provide essential information quickly and clearly. Such abbreviations as appear and the few marks used for indicating pronunciation are believed to be so clear and so well known as to create no confusion.

Conspicuous to one who opens this dictionary are the simplification of the pronunciation scheme, the innovation in the indication of accent, and the elimination of unfamiliar symbols and abbreviations. The pronunciation scheme, which is fully explained in the section on page xii, was designed, after years of experimentation and testing, to provide instant interpretation and to eliminate the laborious study of intricate and baffling symbols which generally discourage all but assiduous students of phonetics. The use of the underscore to indicate accent is a new device. The eye immediately interprets its significance, from the familiar use of the underscore in marking emphasis.

Vocabulary: No single volume could contain every literary, scientific, technical, trade, dialectal, cant, local, and slang term or expression which the English language affords—a language embracing the speech habits of peoples of North America, the British Isles, Australia, large areas of Africa, India, and the Philippines and other islands of the Pacific. It is believed, however, that no owner of this book can be justly disappointed in the wealth of information or the wide range of terms in all those fields that he will find herein. In the selection of the terms to be included, the editors drew heavily upon the textbooks used in college and university courses and the supplementary reading required in those courses—engineering, medicine, law, agriculture, forestry, commerce, music, art, literature—all the arts and sciences. Their belief was that by covering all the needs of the college student, in whatever direction those needs might lie, they would then meet the practical requirements of the majority of men and women in any walk of life.

Science and arts: In recent years, great interest has been shown in fundamental sciences and in technical subjects. This dictionary meets that interest—in chemistry, physics, medicine, radio and other branches of electrical science, motion pictures, aviation, etc. Each new discovery and new process has brought new words into the language. All these fields have been explored and the record of the findings is entered in these pages. The arts have been similarly explored; new terms or meanings in painting, in music, in drama, in the vast range of literature, in fashions and decoration, as well as in domestic sciences, have been recorded and carefully defined.

Words common to the literature of all English-speaking people are necessarily included in these pages. Hence, for example, such dialectal terms as are found in the works of Robert Burns or Sir Walter Scott, or other writers who are known wherever English is spoken, and such archaic or obsolete terms as are found in the King James Version of the Bible or in the writings of Shakespeare are duly recorded. The nature or the source of such words is shown, usually by abbreviation, in brackets immediately after the entry as [Scot.] for Scottish, [Obs.] for obsolete or archaic, [Prov. Eng.] for provincial British dialect. Words and phrases from foreign languages which have become thoroughly a part of our language, both in pronunciation and usage—as chauffeur, garage, blitz, etc.—are treated as ordinary English words, and the language of origin is shown, as ordinarily, in the treatment of etymologies. But those still on the borderline of acceptance or still retaining the characteristics, in form, pronunciation, or usage, of the original language, are identified by the name of the language, usually abbreviated, in brackets immediately after the pronunciation and part of speech; as, smör'·gås·bord (smœr'·gōs·bōrd) noun [Sw.]. In similar manner, words used in, or peculiar to localities in the United States, but not in general use throughout the country, are labeled, in brackets, [Local].

Informal English: Because, through the influence of many factors, it is no longer possible to draw precise lines of distinction between the various forms of unconventional English now permissible in informal speech, no attempt has been made in these pages to distinguish between slang usage and colloquial usage. Much of the slang of yesterday has become the popular everyday phrase of today, and the slang of today may be the colloquial usage of tomorrow. Hence, such of these terms as have been admitted to these pages are labeled "popular," by the bracketed abbreviation [Pop.], the label serving to indicate that in the opinion of the editors and other competent observers the word or meaning so labeled may be used in ordinary conversation or writing but has not yet achieved the dignity of usage in formal speech or writing.

Vulgarisms: A conscientious lexicographer may omit words or meanings of unquestionable vulgarity from a general dictionary; but, however greatly he may deplore the use of certain terms which are considered derogatory or offensive by individuals, or by persons of various races, nations, or religious beliefs, he cannot ignore them if they are widely encountered in reading or in speech. A thoughtful person, who would not intentionally injure the feelings of a neighbor or an employee, may do so in ignorance if unaware that the word he uses is offensive. Hence, particular attention has been given to such entries in this dictionary, and care has been taken to caution against the use of those that are especially likely to arouse ill feeling.

Trade names: Many manufactured articles have received such wide popularity in recent years that the names given to them by the makers have almost become household words. Some persons take them, erroneously, to be generic words, applicable to any article of similar nature. In most instances, however, these names are proprietary, owned by the maker of the specific product. The most widely known of these names are included among the vocabulary entries in this dictionary, with a brief description of the product to which it is usually applied. Each is shown with an initial capital letter. As a further precaution against indiscriminate use, though without intentional prejudice to existing or future legal decisions, the description contains the phrase, "a trade name," by which it is to be understood that the name appears to have been invented by the maker of the article and should be applied to his goods only.

Military terms: The great number of men and women who became members of the military forces or of auxiliary organizations during World War II and the effect of that War upon the literature of our era have necessitated the inclusion of many hundreds of military terms in these pages. The services of Lt. Col. Arthur Vollmer, U.S.A., formerly in charge of the preparation of English–French, English–Spanish, English–German dictionaries for the War Department, were engaged for this purpose. Not only was he experienced in the field of lexicography, but also his service in various branches of the U.S. Army equipped him to supply an equal accuracy of definition to the wide range of terms that pertain to military usage. The war years brought about a coinage of many terms, some that could be considered ephemeral, as expedients adopted purely for temporary or emergency use, and some like jeep, bazooka, flak, and others, likely to be permanent increments to the language. Matter that has been deemed impermanent has been excluded.

Geographical terms: The wide-spread character of World War II brought about an unprecedented interest in geographical terms. Places, such as Guadalcanal, the Marianas, Attu, Okinawa, previously unnamed dots on most maps, assumed a lasting historical importance. To provide for this expanding field, all places of historical or of geographical importance, including all countries, states, and the chief cities of the world, and the principal mountains, lakes, islands, rivers, and seas, are shown within the main body of the text.

Biographical entries include the notable leaders, statesmen, scientists, industrialists, artists, writers, and rulers of all ages. The field of Mythology embraces the chief Gaelic, Teutonic, Scandinavian gods and heroes and many in American Indian legend and mythology, as well as those of the more familiar Greek and Roman myths. An especial feature is the introduction of the most outstanding themes or motifs of the world's folklore, some of them familiar and beloved fairy tales, which have been common to many peoples through the ages, and some, like the American folklore, typified in the tales of the amazing Paul Bunyan and Pecos Bill, developments of relatively modern times. Pen names and the names of fictional characters are listed under the first element, as "Mark Twain," "Simon Legree," "Paul Bunyan."

Spelling: As this book is intended for the guidance of the general public rather than to serve a specialized group, the spellings of main entries and of words in the text are those that conform most generally with usage throughout the United States or, among scientific terms, that have been adopted by the most representative bodies. Variant spellings in accepted use are clearly indicated. It is to be understood that these alternate spellings, as the terminals –our (of labour, humour) and –ise (of capitalise, summarise), preferred in England, are as correct as the forms shown in the main entries although not the preferred practice in the United States.

Geographical spellings: In the spelling of geographical names the latest rulings of the United States Board on Geographical Names have been accepted for all places within or under the political jurisdiction of the United States. Thanks, in part, to the greater spread in communication within recent years, much of the earlier confusion in the spelling of the names of foreign places has been resolved through the efforts of various groups, and a greater degree of unanimity has been reached. In each instance, in the record of such places, the spelling entered herein is that favored by the greatest weight of usage. Diverse spellings appear on many maps and in many reference works, however, so it has been necessary to record them also and to refer the reader to the entry under which he will find the information that he seeks.

Capitalization: To indicate promptly and clearly the correct way of writing words derived from proper names, such words as require capitalization are printed with initial capital letters. In the treatment of the terminology of the sciences the aim has been to follow the system of spelling and capitalization recognized as authoritative in each science. Where in any instance usage varies, both the capitalized and the non-capitalized forms are indicated.

Syllabication: The division of words into syllables, next in importance to spelling among printers and the vast army of typists who desire a neat and attractive page, is clearly indicated in a manner that requires no special interpretation. The method is based primarily upon pronunciation, with such modifications as are dictated by the practice of typography.

Compounding: The Standard Dictionary, edition of 1893, was the first English dictionary in which an attempt was made to resolve the compounding of English words into systematic principles. In recent years this phase of literary practice has been re-studied to achieve greater simplification and consistency, and it is fitting that a successor to the dictionary that was a pioneer in this field should be the first to recognize the modern development. Miss Alice Morton Ball, editor of the U.S. Department of State, has long studied this important phase of the language. Her work, Compounding in the English Language, first published in 1939, has won deserved recognition. Through the courtesy of the Department of State, the services of Miss Ball were borrowed from the Department in order that she might personally supervise the application of her principles directly to the pages of this book.

Plant names: For the vocabulary entries of plant names, the principles on compounding developed by the Joint Committee on Standardized Plant Names have been accepted. The recommendations of this Committee call for the compounding of certain types of names in botanical works specifically and, ultimately, in general works also. Thus, for example, the compounded form, OSAGE-ORANGE, appears as the main entry in this dictionary, in conformance with the recommendations of the Joint Committee, as a visual reminder to the reader that the shrub is not a member of the orange family, in the scientific sense, regardless of the general resemblance of its fruit to the true orange. Current forms that differ from scientific usage are recognized as variants—in this instance by the appended phrase, "Also OSAGE ORANGE."

Hyphens: For typographic clarity throughout this dictionary, words in which the compounding is indicated by a hyphen, words known as "hyphemes," are so indicated by a hyphen of double length, both in the vocabulary entries and throughout the text. Compound words to be written as solid words—or "solidemes," as they are called—have only the usual center dot (·) for the syllabic break in the vocabulary entries and are printed solid when they appear in the text. In the text, if, at the end of a line, a syllabic break occurs in a word other than a hypheme, the break is shown by a short hyphen, or one of regular length; if in the middle of a hypheme, the break is marked by a hyphen of double length.

Definition: The definitions in this dictionary are based upon the Funk & Wagnalls Practical "Standard" Dictionary. Each definition, however, was critically reexamined by a trained staff of editors, all of whom brought new vision and perspective to the work. Very few former definitions were left in the original form. Each was examined, checked against the original source, compared with the records of usage, and, if necessary, modified—by an added word or phrase, by an additional definition, or, in many instances, entirely rewritten. Specialists were consulted whenever, as with new technical terms, the occasion warranted. No expense was spared to insure the greatest accuracy. And, as stated previously, thousands of terms, many of them so new as not to have appeared previously in any dictionary, are entered and defined in this volume.

Parts of speech: The appearance of the definitions also differs from those in the earlier book. The part of speech of the main entry is written out in full, immediately following the entry or its pronunciation, as noun, or, if abbreviated, the abbreviation is sufficiently extended as to permit little chance of doubt, as tr. verb for transitive verb, or adj. for adjective. If the term has two or more different meanings, each definition is set off unmistakably by a bold-faced figure, as 1 . . . 2 . . . 3. The many words in the language that are used as two or more different parts of speech, all derived from a common source, as place, verb, and place, noun, are carried under a single entry. If the definitions comprise only a few lines, the parts of speech, each separately defined, follow each other and are set off by a heavy dash; but if one or another of the definitions is lengthy, the heavy dash preceding the second or succeeding parts of speech is carried to the margin, beneath the main entry.

Comparatives and plurals: The consultant need be in no doubt as to the correct spelling of any irregular plural, of any form of a verb, nor of a noun or other part of speech derived from a main entry. The comparisons of adjectives and of adverbs, when formed otherwise than by the normal addition of -er and -est, are shown in like manner; as, JOL·LY adj. [JOL·LI·ER, JOL·LI·EST].

Homonyms: Many words in English, identical in spelling, have come into the language from altogether different sources. As a rule, the meanings are very different, as with felt, the past tense of feel, and felt, matted wool; and sometimes the pronunciations differ, as with row, to propel (a boat) with oars, and row, a noisy quarrel. In a dictionary, however, such words must be entered one beneath the other, and it is often necessary to refer to one or another of the several words in other parts of the work. For convenience, therefore, and to prevent the misinterpretation of a cross-reference, each entry in a group of homonyms is preceded by a small half-encircled number, as 1FELT . . . ; 2FELT.

Derived phrases: Phrases of two words or more are defined in this book under the significant element. Prepositional phrases and verb phrases always appear under the most important word: on the loose is defined under loose; to blow hot and cold, to blow up appear under blow. The entry split infinitive is run in under infinitive, for the adjective split stands in common modifier relation to it. And by the same rule atomic bomb is defined under bomb; Canada goose under goose; pocket gopher under gopher.

Unit phrases: When a phrase, especially one of two words, is considered as a unit in itself, however, it is entered alphabetically according to its first element. Black death is the name of a plague and would be erroneously entered under death; false face is a kind of mask and would be improperly defined under face; dark horse is an unknown and unexpected candidate and, even in its original sense, is not aptly described under horse; Old World denotes the Eastern Hemisphere; open house is hospitality or a time set aside for visitors, as at a school or other institution.

Animal and plant names: A third class of similar entries includes the names of birds, animals, flowers, etc., which appear in alphabetical place under the first element. In some instances, as those of numerous flies, moths, ducks, and the like, a confusion is avoided by listing them separately rather than under a large general entry. In other instances, a popular name is listed for purposes of identification—as, "Carolina dove The mourning dove."—whereby it is understood that the scientific and full definition is to be found under the reference (under "mourning dove," in this instance).

Etymologies in this volume have been re-studied with two purposes in mind: first, to present them in such form that they would be readily intelligible to the student, and, second, to bring them into accord with the latest researches of leading scholars in comparative philology. All words of Teutonic source—including Old English, Old Norse, Old German, and Scandinavian—were treated by Dr. Kemp Malone, of Johns Hopkins University. Words from other sources were examined, treated, or revised, as needed, by various members of the editorial staff according to their special fields of learning. Excursions into the realm of fancy have not been permitted.

Other Aids to Consultation: The treatment of synonyms and antonyms that has proved of such value in the Funk & Wagnalls New "Standard" Dictionary has, with some modification, been retained. To make this feature of greater service, the material is shown in type of the same size as that in which other text matter is printed.

Lists and tables: A number of valuable lists and tables are included, containing matter to which ready or repeated reference is desirable, as of alphabets, chemical elements, constellations, geologic eras, major wars, military and naval grades, metric tables, manias, phobias. Additional collections of related material are grouped throughout the book. Thus, under calendar are to be found the nine important calendars since early times; under terrier, the characteristic features of the leading breeds, and so on.

Varying Pronunciations: Correct pronunciation in any large region depends upon the consensus of usage in that region. Just as British speech is correct in England, so is American speech correct in the United States, and that typical of the North Central States as correct as that typical of the North Atlantic States. Hence, in this dictionary, such words, as ask, grass, path, dog, on, god, which vary markedly in regional areas, are not respelled for pronunciation, and those, such as laugh, in which the spelling does not indicate the pronunciation, are respelled with such notation as "varying from laff to lahf" in recognition of regional usage. Otherwise, with the aid of the Editorial Advisory Committee in many instances, the effort has been made to show the pronunciations generally preferred in America. British usage, when differing, is also shown, and so labeled.

Alternate pronunciations: Where two or more alternate pronunciations are shown, it is to be understood that either may be employed, that equally cultivated speakers use one or the other. The order of listing indicates that the first appears to be the current preference. Special usages, as the nautical pronunciation of foresail, are distinguished.

Authorities: Many authorities have been consulted for the pronunciation of personal and place names. For those of living persons an effort has been made to record the usage of the individual who is entered, a usage sometimes at variance with popular usage. For place names, especially for those on which interest was centered in World War II, use was freely made of the voluminous and painstaking compilation, "World Words," by Dr. W. Cabell Greet, prepared primarily for news announcers of the Columbia Broadcasting System, and containing the pronunciation of thousands of geographical names. The pronunciation of American and British place names are those recommended, respectively, by the United States Board on Geographical Names and the Permanent Committee on Geographical Names for British Official Use.

Credit: Aside from those to whom specific credit has been given in foregoing paragraphs, acknowledgment is made to Dr. C. R. Addinall, of the Merck Laboratories, for information leading to the definitions of the terms in vitaminology, the sulfa drugs, and other new curative agencies; to Dr. Abigail C. Boardman for many terms pertaining to drama and the theater; to Dr. John Day, Columbia University, for the chart of comparative alphabets; to Mr. E. K. Field, U. S. National Park Service, for certain terms and illustrations pertaining to mountaineering; to Mr. Assen Jordanoff and to Lt. Comdr. H. E. Boggess for information leading to an exact interpretation of certain terms in aviation; to Miss Olga Baul for helpful lists of terms, especially of European folk dances; to Dr. Henry K. Townes, of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, U. S. Department of Agriculture, for his critical examination and revision of insect terminology, and to numerous individuals who freely supplied valuable information upon simple request. Credit is also due to Mr. C. H. Griffith, of the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., for his cooperation in the development of the type used herein for vocabulary entries and for the illustrative page under type, and to the officers and compositors of H. Wolff Book Manufacturing Co., Inc., for their skill in handling the complex problems entering into the physical construction of this volume.

In particular, the editor wishes to express his deep personal gratitude to the members of his staff for their loyal, pleasant, eager, and efficient support in this undertaking, their aid in solving many perplexing problems, their mutual cooperation, and their willingness to sacrifice personal interests in a common cause. He is especially grateful to Miss Mamie Harmon, M.A., his early associate, for many valued suggestions, particularly on editorial styling; to Mrs. Maria Leach, M.A., not only for general scholarly ability reflected on every page of this book, but in particular for her researches in American English and in the fields of folklore and mythology; to Mr. Philip von S. Krapp, B.A., for continued editorial skill and in particular for his aid in classical etymology; to Mr. Harold Ward under whose capable eyes passed most scientific and technical terms listed in this work and who devised the many tables of convenient reference; to Miss Bernice Coller for geographical entries and for general supervision of all proofreading, and, by no means least, to Mr. Jerry Fried for unremitting and painstaking care in all matters pertaining to consistent treat-served conscientiously for brief periods in the preparation of material in various specific fields.

Editorial Advisory Committee: At the outset of this work, the editor, paying heed to the many thousands of communications from dictionary-users he had received in a quarter-century of experience in lexicography, contemplated certain departures from conventional dictionary practices of the past fifty or seventy-five years with the intent to produce a dictionary that would serve a wider range of the public—a book that, lacking nothing in scholarship, would be virtually free from the mystical signs, abbreviations, symbols, and redundancies which confuse many readers. In order to reach a decision, he called upon Dr. W. Cabell Greet, of the Department of English, Columbia University, editor of American Speech, and speech consultant of the Columbia Broadcasting System, to form and head an advisory committee of educators and men of letters, whose function it would be to render impartial criticism, suggestion, or advice upon such matters as would be submitted. The names of the members of this committee appear elsewhere.

Progressively, various studies were submitted to the committee, studies that covered in detail each phase of the proposed treatment. Criticisms and suggestions were requested and freely given, and many were accepted. No step was finally adopted except with the approval of a clear majority of all members. In some instances of radical departure from conventional practice, approval was almost unanimous. The members of the committee were kept informed of the progress of the work, and samples of printed pages were submitted to them from time to time for further analysis, criticism, and suggestion. The scheme finally adopted met the full approval of a large majority of the members, but the editor recognizes that upon him alone lies all the responsibility, both for the interpretation of the intent of the members and for the manner in which that intent has been performed.

CHARLES EARLE FUNK

PRONUNCIATION

The method adopted in the dictionary of the English language for indicating pronunciations is simple. It merely takes advantage of certain assumptions upon which all phonetic systems are based—the assumptions that the consultant already knows the values of the letters in the English alphabet, that he knows the sound of a in rat, of i in mine, of u in cute, and so on, and that he knows the normal sound of certain combinations of letters, as ch in church, sh in ship, aw in law, oy in boy. It recognizes further that the majority of English words are composed of syllables each of which, through conformity with words already familiar, is correctly pronounced when the syllable is marked; that the full word may then be correctly pronounced if the stressed syllable or syllables are clearly indicated.

Accordingly, by the insertion of a centered dot (·), the words are divided into syllables conforming with the rules of printing or writing. Accent or stress is plainly indicated by underscoring, a familiar device for indicating emphasis. Words that carry two or more rhythmical stresses have those syllables underscored, and the conventional single accent (′) shows the syllable which receives the heavier stress. In the majority of the words in this dictionary no further assistance toward a correct pronunciation is required by the person who is old enough or sufficiently familiar with the language to use a reference book of this scope. For such words no phonetic respelling is given. All other words are respelled, either in part or in full.

Even stress: No underscore is shown under compound words of two syllables, as bookcase, campfire, schoolboy, spellbind, etc. Such words are normally pronounced with an almost even stress on each syllable. Usually the stress is slightly heavier on the first element, but, as for emphasizing differences—as, book*case*, not book*stand*—the stress may be shifted to the second. Similarly, the words of certain foreign languages—notably French, Chinese, Japanese—are unmarked for accent, for in the native speech stress is not employed as in English and an even stress is preferable to a heavy accent in any one syllable. In French as pronounced in English, the conventional stress upon the last syllable is indicated in the respelling.

Phonetic simplification: In all respellings the needs of most persons are best served by the employment of simple, easily identified devices which the consultant does not need to memorize. Chiefly to avoid non-alphabetical symbols for the representation of certain English sounds, the ordinary phonetic respellings are supplemented by the familiar macron (¯) and breve (˘); thus: ă, săne; ā, sānd; ĕ, ēve; ĕ, gĕt; ī, mīne; ĭ, pĭn; ō, nōte; ŏ, nŏt; o͞o, ro͞od; o͝o, fo͝ot; ū, cūte; ŭ, cŭt; ȳ, mȳ.

Speech variations: The intent in this dictionary is to give preference to American usage—in spelling, in definitions, and in pronunciation. Although British usage is not neglected, care is taken to label it when the difference is marked. Standards of American pronunciation vary in different areas. Thus ASK is pronounced (ahsk) in some areas, (ăsk) in others, and in others the (a) is neither so broad as the first nor so flat as the second. Each of these is wholly correct in the area in which it is generally used, and this dictionary does not advocate a preference.

Many other words have two or more fully accepted pronunciations which are not regional in character. Thus the word COCAINE is pronounced by most non-technical speakers in two syllables, with the second syllable sounded as (cane). Some put the heavier stress on the first syllable, and others upon the second. Chemists, however, divide it into three syllables, accenting the first—CO′·CA·INE, with the final syllable sounded as (een). Similarly, some speakers pronounce the word ECONOMIC with the first syllable sounded as (ee), although others equally cultured give it as (ĕk). All such pronunciations are equally correct, but one is necessarily shown first in the dictionary. The order of arrangement is believed to be current American preference, as determined in part by observation and by various authorities, in part through the aid of the Pronouncing Dictionary of American English (1944), by J. S. Kenyon and T. A. Knott, and, in many instances, through the assistance of the Editorial Advisory Committee.

SPELLING CHARACTERISTICS OF ENGLISH WORDS

As a child progresses through school he becomes familiar, consciously or not, with certain characteristics of English spelling, with certain combinations of vowels and consonants which automatically he associates with definite speech sounds. Thus, for example, at least by the time he has finished high school, if he encounters such a word as AUTOPHYTE, which he may not have seen before, he will pronounce the syllables correctly as soon as they are pointed off—AU′·TO·PHYTE. That is, through long association, he knows that in English words the normal value of the combination AU is the sound of (aw) in awl, PH is equal to (f), and that final silent E following a consonant indicates that the preceding vowel is usually long.

General rules: The general rules affecting the pronunciation of English words which are unconsciously observed by English-speaking persons have been followed in this dictionary and are given here primarily for the benefit of foreign students of the language.

Rule I In an accented syllable terminating in a vowel, the vowel has its alphabetic or long sound; as, BA·SIN, DE·I·TY, RE·LI·A·BLE, MO·MENT, MU·SIC, HY·DRO·GEN.

Departures from this rule (as FA·THER) are respelled.

Rule II In an accented syllable terminating in a consonant,[1] the vowel has its short sound; as, MAG·NET, COM·PEL, CIT·Y, DE·MOC·RA·CY, RE·PUB·LIC, MYS·TE·RY.

Seeming exceptions not respelled include the derivatives of verbs in which, by Rule III, the main vowel of the final syllable is long. The vowel remains long in the derivatives although, in conformance with printing practice, the division of the word does not so indicate; as, BAKE, BAK·ER, BAK·ING; CON·SOLE, CON·SOL·ING, CON·SOL·A·BLE.

Rule III Final silent E following a single consonant[1] of an accented syllable indicates that the preceding vowel in that syllable usually has its alphabetic or long sound; as, TAME, CON·VENE, IN·VITE, PRO·MOTE, DIS·PUTE, STYLE.

[1] If the consonant under Rules II and III is the letter R, the quality of the preceding vowel is distinctly altered. See discussions under AR, ER, IR, OR, UR, in the following list of Normal Interpretation of English spelling.

Rule IV In ordinary conversation the vowel in an unaccented syllable tends to become weakened or obscure; the vowels A, O, and U approach (uh), as in *a*bout, final, connect, opinion, careful; the vowels E and I approach (i) or (uh), as in decide, emblem, emigrate, civil.

Note: The distinctness with which the vowel in an unaccented syllable is pronounced varies according to the habit or wish of the speaker. He who enunciates each syllable with unusual precision may accord the vowels in unstressed syllables the values indicated in Rules I and II, for vowels in stressed syllables. The careless speaker may elide all unstressed vowels. Thus, each O in POTATO may be long (ō) or obscure (uh), depending upon the speaker.

Rule V Doubled consonants approximate a single sound which is regarded as a part of the accented syllable, as in MAT·TER, DIF·FER·ENT, GRAM·MAR.

Rule VI In solid compound words composed of two monosyllabic words, as BOOK·CASE, RAG·MAN, BACK·STOP, SPELL·BIND, DOWN·STAIRS, DRAW·BRIDGE, each element retains its original pronunciation and the first element usually has a slightly heavier stress.

Note: In this dictionary neither element of the words in this category carries a mark for stress, as each would require it. In derivatives, however, as SPELL′·BIND·ER, the stresses are shown. Compounds in which the connection is by hyphen carry the pronunciations and stresses of the respective separate elements.

NORMAL ENGLISH VALUES

The pronunciation scheme in the dictionary of the English language, as stated, is based on the acceptance of certain characteristics of English spelling which, through frequency of occurrence, have become commonly associated with definite sounds. Those to whom the language is native will instinctively give the normal or most frequent interpretation to the spelling even when another interpretation could be selected. Hence, whenever by frequency of use it is clearly established that a given combination of letters will be correctly pronounced by a person sufficiently advanced to use a dictionary of this scope, it has not been deemed necessary to respell that combination for pronunciation. Such combinations, however, as are not clearly established—as the combination EI in WEIGHT, HEIGHT, LEISURE—are respelled in all instances.

The list of normal interpretations is given in full below. This list is primarily intended for students of speech or for foreigners who are interested in the characteristics of the language. The average consultant is not likely to need it, although the list may clarify some point about which he is uncertain. The sounds of the letters of the alphabet are discussed under the respective letters throughout the text and are not repeated here. The list that follows is intended to include only those combinations which, through frequency of occurrence or position, are characteristically interpreted with the value ascribed to them. However, for the greater convenience of the consultant, other means may be used in this dictionary for the indication of pronunciation than the respellings indicated. Thus, for example, the second syllable of the word CROCHET may be respelled as (shay) rather than (shā); FIEND may be respelled (feend) rather than (tēnd); TUESDAY shown as (tyōō′dī) rather than (tūz′dī), and PATIENT as (pay′-shunt) rather than (pā′shuhnt). Each word has been considered apart from others and the means chosen to indicate its pronunciation will convey the information most readily and with the least chance of confusion.

NORMAL INTERPRETATION OF ENGLISH SPELLING

	NORMAL INTERPRETATION	VALUE
	(1) Long (ā) under the conditions of Rules I and III, as BA·BY, O·RA·TION, MATE.	ā
	(2) Short (ă) under Rule II, as in CAT, BAD.	ă
	(3) Obscure (uh) under Rule IV, as in A·BOUT, SO·FA, DOL·LAR, FI·NAL.	uh
	Exceptions are respelled, as FA·THER (fah′·thur), BALM (bahm). This so-called "broad a" is the sound of alphabetic a in most European languages.
AI	Long a (ā), as in PAIN, MAID, SAIL.	ā
AIR	(ăr) as in PAIR, HAIR, CHAIR. See note under AR(2).	ăr
AR	(1) The sound of ah + r, as in BAR, CAR, FAR, and in an accented syllable when followed by a consonant, as in BARK, CART, FARM, PAR·LOR, MAR·KET, EN·LARGE.	ar
	(2) Long a + r, when followed by e in the same syllable, as in CARE, FARE, DE·CLARE.	ăr
	This sound, customarily described as shown, is much closer to the sound of short e + r, as in very, there, merry.
	(3) Short a + r, when accented and followed by a vowel or a second r in the succeeding syllable, as in CHAR·I·OT, PAR·AL·LEL, CAR·ROT.	ăr
	(4) Obscure a (uh) + r, under Rule IV, in an unaccented syllable, as in BEG·GAR, MOR·TAR, REG·U·LAR.	ur
AU, AW	As in HAUL, FAULT, AU·TO, AW·FUL, LAW.	aw
AY	Long a (ā), as in HAY, SAY, MAY.	ā
C	(1) As (s) before e, i, and y, as in CELL, C·I·TY, FAC·ET (făs′·it), AC·CESS (ăk′·s	s

	NORMAL INTERPRETATION	VALUE
	(2) As (k) before a, o, u, c, l, r, and t and at the end of a word, as in CAVE, COST, CUT, AC·CENT, CLAP, CREAM, AC·TION, MU·SIC. Exceptions are indicated by the spellings (cæ) and the character (ç).	k
	Although C may close a syllable, as in PAC′·I·FY, TO·BAC·CO, DOC·U·MENT, its sound is (s) or (k) in accordance with the letter that follows.
CH	A single sound as in CHAIR, CHEESE, CHIP, EACH, CHURCH.	ch
	Departures from the normal, as in chemistry, chorus, Chicago, chassis, are respelled with (k) or (sh).
CIOUS	An unaccented terminal, as in TENACIOUS, GRACIOUS.	shus
DG	As in JUDGE, EDGE, BUDGING. See also J.	j
E	(1) Long (ē) under the conditions of Rules I and III as in E·QUAL, ′EE·MALE, COM·PETE.	ē
	(2) Short (ĕ) under Rule II as in BED, HEN, GET.	ĕ
	(3) Obscure, under Rule IV, as in RE·FUND, SE·CURE, EM·BLEM, MAR·KET. See also ED, ER, I.E.	I or uh
EA	Long e (ē), as in BEAN, MEAT, LEAF, RE·VEAL.	ē
EAR	As in EAR, FEAR, HEAR. See note under ER(2)	ēr
ED	Suffix When it becomes a separate syllable, as in DE·MAND·ED, SEATED, E is obscure under Rule IV. See also note under Y (vowel).	ĭd
	In other cases the e is silent and the sound of d is added to the simple verb, as RUBBED (rŭbd), WINGED (wĭngd), VE·TOED (vee′·tōd). Added to verbs closing with the sound of (ch), (f), (k), (p), (s), or (sh)—as in REACHED,

	NORMAL INTERPRETATION	VALUE
	PICKED, FLAPPED, KISSED, DASHED, TRIUMPHED, COUGHED—the e is silent and d is automatically sounded as (t) (reecht, pŭft, pikt, flăpt, kist, dăsht, trī′·umft, cawft).
EN	See FOREIGN SOUNDS.
ER	(1) A sound like that in fur, burn, turkey, as in HER, TERM, RE·FER, and in an accented syllable when followed by a consonant, as in PER·SON, MER CY, RE SERVE.	ŭr
	(2) Long e (ē) + r, when followed by e in the same syllable, as in HERE, RE VERE, SIN·CERE LY. This sound customarily described as shown, is much closer to the sound of short i + r, as in mirror, spirit.	ēr
	(3) Short e (ĕ) + r, when accented and followed by a vowel or a second r in the succeeding syllable, as in VER·Y, BER RY, A·MER I CA. In verbs in which the final R of an accented syllable is doubled in the formation of derivatives—as in A VER, A VER·RING; RE FER, RE·FER RING—the sound of the root remains as in ER(1) above.	ĕr
	(4) An obscure vowel (uh) + r, under Rule IV, in an unaccented syllable, as in TELL·ER, GEN·ER AL.	ŭr
ES	Suffix In verbs and plurals of nouns, S is sounded as (z) and E is obscure as in Rule V. See also note under Y (vowel).	iz
EU EW	As in EWE, FEUD, FEW, PEW, EU·CLID. When followed by R, and also in unaccented syllables, EU becomes slightly weakened and is sounded (yōō), as in EU ROPE, EU·GENE. When preceded by N, or S, many Americans give EW the sound of (ōō), as NEW (nōō), SEWER (sōō′·ur).	ū
EX	Prefix (1) Before a consonant, as in EX·PERT, EX·PECT.	ĕks
	(2) Before a vowel, as in EX·ACT, EX·IST. If the prefix before a vowel carries an accent, as in EX·IT, EX·ILE, the sound may be either (ĕks) or (ĕgz).	ĕgz
FUL	An unaccented suffix, as in CAREFUL, BEAUTIFUL. See Rule IV.	ful
G	(1) Hard before a, o, u, l, and r, and at the end of a syllable, as in GAME, GOT, GUM, GLAD, GREET, BIG. See also NG.	g
	(2) Soft (as j) before e, y. G is usually soft before e and i, as in gem and gin, but the exceptions are so numerous that these instances are respelled with j.	j
	(3) Silent when followed by n in the same syllable, as GNAT, GNOME, SIGN, FOREIGN.
GH	Hard g, at the beginning of a syllable. Within a syllable, GH may be sounded as (f), as in LAUGH, ROUGH, or may be silent, as in THOUGHT, WEIGH. Such syllables are respelled.	g
	(1) Aspirate at the beginning of a syllable, as in HOME, HIS, HELP. Through French influence on English speech after the Norman invasion of England, aspirate h was dropped from many English words and is still not sounded in HEIR, HOUR, HONOR, HONEST, and, by some, in HERB, HOTEL, etc.
	(2) Silent after a vowel in the same syllable and after r, as in JOHN, MESSIAH, POOH, RHEUMATISM, MYRRH. See also WH.
I	(1) Long, under the conditions of Rules I and III, as in FI·NAL, RE·LI·A·BLE, LINE.	ī
	(2) Short, under Rule II, as in BIB, HIM, COM·MIT.	ĭ
	(3) Obscure, under Rule IV, as in HAB·IT, POS·SI·BLE, DI·RECT.	ĭ or uh
IE	(1) Long i (ī) in the short and familiar words, DIE, FIE, HIE, LIE, PIE, TIE, VIE, and in their plural and verb forms.	ī
	(2) Long e (ē), when followed by a consonant in an accented syllable, as in PIECE, THIEF, BE·LIEVE, PRIEST.	ē
	(3) An obscure vowel in an unaccented syllable, usually a suffix or terminal, as in DOG·GIE, AUNT·IE, MAG·GIE, COL·LIE.	ĭ
IES IGH	See note under Y (vowel). Long i, as in HIGH, NIGHT, SIGH.	ī
IR	(1) A sound like that in fur, burn, turkey, as in FIR, SIR, BIRD, FIRST, WHIRL, and in an accented syllable when followed by a consonant, as in CIR·CUS.	ŭr
	(2) Long i + r, when followed by e in the same syllable as in FIRE, RE·TIRE.	īr
	(3) Short i (ĭ) + r, when accented and followed by a vowel or a second r in the succeeding syllable, as in SPIR·IT, MIR·A·CLE, MIR·ROR, IR RI·TATE. This sound is almost identical with the sound (eer).	Ir
	(4) An obscure vowel (uh) + r, under Rule IV, in an unaccented syllable, as in TA·PIR, VIR·GIN IA.	ur
IVE	An unaccented suffix, as in PENSIVE, NATIVE, RELATIVE.	iv
J	As in JET, JOIN, INJURE: used in respelling soft g (of gem, genius, ginger): equals DG of JUDGE.
	As in KITTEN, KEEP, LIKE: used in respelling hard c and, as required, ch (as in chorus, chemistry, etc.). K is silent before N in the same syllable, as in KNIT (nit), KNIFE (nife).
K	See FOREIGN SOUNDS.
LE	When appearing as the terminal of a word (and in words created therefrom by suffixes), sounded as in LITTLE, LITTLENESS, TROUBLE, TROUBLESOME, RIFLE, RIFLED, IDLE. In singing or slow speech the sound is an obscure vowel + l (lit′·ul).
LU	See note under U(1).
LY	Suffix As in BAD·LY, KIND LY, FREE LY.	lī
MENT	Suffix When unaccented, as in DOCUMENT, TESTAMENT.	munt
N	(1) As in NINE, NOON. Becomes (ng) before K (or hard c) or G in the same syllable, as in BANK, SANC TION, YOUNG. See NG.
	(2) Silent after M in the same syllable, as in DAMN, HYMN, COLUMN, but retains its normal sound when placed in the following syllable, as in DAM NA·TION, HYM·NOL·O GY, COL UM·NAR.
NG	See FOREIGN SOUNDS. A single nasal sound, as in BANG, SING, LONG, HUNG, and occurring before K (or hard c) and hard G in the same syllable. Syllabic separation of n and k (or hard c) and of n and hard g, as in UN KIND, IN·CUR, EN·GAGE, indicates that each retains its normal sound. Exceptions, such as AN KLE (ang′·kl), UN CLE (ung′·kl), LAN GUAGE (lăng′·gwij) are respelled.	ng
O	(1) Long, under the conditions of Rules I and III, as in O CEAN, OC TO·BER, HOME.
	(2) Short, under Rule II, as in HOT, LOCK, COM MON, DE MOC RA CY. In American speech the sound of short o (ŏ) is usually that of (ah), like the A in FATHER. In some words, as ON, DOG, GOD, SOFT, COFFEE, ACROSS, the sound has regional variations ranging from (ah) to (aw).
	(3) Half long or obscure (see note under Rule IV) when closing an unaccented syllable, as in PO·TA·TO, O BEY, VI·O·LET.	o
	(4) Obscure, under Rule IV, when followed by a consonant in an unaccented syllable, as CON·FESS, BA·CON, OC CUR.	uh
OA	Long o (ō), as in BOAT, SOAP, OAK, COAL.	ō
OAR	As in OAR, BOARD, COARSE. Many American speakers do not distinguish this sound, and ORE of BORE, CORE, etc., and the less frequent, but identical OOR of DOOR and FLOOR, from the much more frequent sound of OR in ORDER, HORSE, MORTAR. See OR.	ōr
OE	Long o (ō), as in TOE, HOE, FOE.
Œ	See FOREIGN SOUNDS.
OI OY	As in OIL, COIN, NOISE, BOY, EMPLOY.	oy
OO	(1) As in TOO, MOON, COOL, BOOT, ROOST.	ōō
	(2) As in WOOL, FOOT, GOOD, LOOK. Note: This sound of OO is identical with the U of FULL, PUSH, PUT.
OOR	Long o (ō) + r, as in DOOR, FLOOR. See note under OAR.	ōr
OR	(1) The sound of (aw) + r, as in FOR, NOR, and in an accented syllable when followed by a consonant, as in CORD, HORSE, OR·DER, MOR·SEL, PRO·POR·TION.	or
	(2) Long o (ō) + r, under Rule III when followed by e in the same syllable, as in MORE, BE·FORE, A·SHORE. See note under OAR.	ōr
	(3) Short o (ŏ) + r, when accented and followed by a vowel or a second r in the succeeding syllable, as in COR·AL, OR·A·CLE, BOR·ROW. In American speech this sound has re-	ŏr

	gional variations ranging from (aw) + r to (ah) + r (as in OR·ANGE, FLOR·I·DA, HOR·RID, etc.).
	(4) An obscure vowel (uh) + r, under Rule IV, in an unaccented syllable, as AC·TOR, O·DOR, NEIGH·BOR·LY.	ur
OU OW	As in OUT, NOUN, HOUSE, THOU, COW, HOW, BROWN, CROWD.	ow
	Words spelled with ou are most frequently pronounced as in out, and when so pronounced are not respelled, but there are many and varied exceptions. For this reason the respellings with ow have been preferred in this dictionary, for the exceptions in which ow is sounded as long o (as in know, show, flow) are infrequent.
OUS	An unaccented suffix.	us
OY	Same as OI.
PH	The sound of (f), as in PHOTOGRAPH, PHILIP, PHOSPHOR.	f
QU	The sound of (kw), as QUICK, QUEEN, QUOTE.	kw
	In the terminal QUE, as in TOQUE, OBLIQUE, UNIQUE, BURLESQUE, both u and e are silent and q is sounded as (k).
R	As in RARE, BIRD, FARM.
	In some regions in America, especially in New England and the Southern States, and among British speakers generally, the sound of r following a vowel in a syllable is indistinct or missing, reflected merely by its effect upon the vowel sound that immediately precedes it.
S	(1) As in SAIL, SISSY.	s
	When s between two vowels has the sound of (z), as in ROSE, RESIST, and many other words, it is respelled.
	(2) The sound of (z) in the endings of plurals, possessives, etc., as in CUBS, BABY'S, BECOMES, BRINGS, ROLLS.	z
	It has not been considered necessary to respell all instances in which s is sounded as (z) in such word formations, nor in those ending in the sound of (f), (k), (p), (t), (th), in which s retains its normal value.
SC	(1) The sound of (sk), before a, o, u, l, and r.	sk
	(2) The sound of (s), before e, i, and y. Compare C.	s
SH	A single sound, as in SHIP, SHOT, RUSH, LASH.
SION	An unaccented suffix: when preceded by a consonant, as in PENSION, MISSION.	shun
	When this suffix is preceded by a vowel, it has the sound (zhun), as in INVASION, VISION, and is respelled.
SU	See note under U(1).
TCH	As in CATCH, FETCH, DITCH, NOTCH, DUTCH.	ch
TH	(1) A single sound, most frequently sounded as in THANK, THIN, THUMB, BOTH, BATH, MOUTH.	th
	(2) Less frequently, especially when followed by e, the sound is soft, as in FATHER, THE, THIS, BATHE: always respelled	th.
TION	An unaccented suffix, as in NATION, MENTION.	shun
	This suffix is so familiar that it has been rarely respelled.
TIOUS	An unaccented terminal, as in FRACTIOUS, VEXATIOUS.	shus
TIVE	See IVE.
TURE	An unaccented syllable, as in NATURE, CAPTURE, PICTURE, PUNCTURE.	chŏŏr or tyŏŏr
	The majority of cultured Americans give this syllable the sound of (chŏŏr), which may become (chur) in ordinary conversation. In precise speech, the sound (tyŏŏr) is sometimes used.
TY	An unaccented suffix, as in FIFTY, LIBERTY.	tĭ
	See also note under Y (vowel).
U	(1) Long (u) under the conditions of Rules I and III, as in CUTE, FUME, DIS·PUTE, U·NIT, IM·MU·NI·TY.	ū
	When preceded by R or J, as in RUBY, RUDE, JUNE, the sound of U is always (ŏŏ) (rŏŏ′·bĭ, rŏŏd, jŏŏn). When preceded by L, as in REVOLUTION, LUDICROUS, usage is divided between (lū) and (lŏŏ), but if the L is preceded in the same syllable by B, C, F, or G, as in BLUE, CONCLUDE, FLUID, GLUE, the sound is always (ŏŏ). When long U (ū) is preceded by D, N, S, or T, as in DUTY, NUMERAL, SUIT, SUPER, TUNE, TUBER, the American tendency is toward (ŏŏ), although careful speakers retain the sound of long u (ū). (Exceptional usages, as SURE, SUGAR, are respelled.)
	(2) Half long where terminating an unaccented syllable, tending to become y + uh, as in U·NITE, AN·NU·AL, TAB′·U·LATE.	yu
	(3) Short (ŭ), under Rule II, as in UP, BUT, FUNNY.	ŭ
	(4) Obscure, under Rule IV, as in CIR·CUS, MIN·I·MUM, UN·TIL, IL′·LUS·TRATE.	uh
	Words spelled with u in which the sound is that of (ŏŏ) or of (o͝o), as FLUTE or BULL, are respelled.
UE	Long u (ū), as in CUE, HUE, DUE, TUESDAY.	ū
	When preceded by D, S, or T, many Americans give UE the sound of (ŏŏ), as DUE (dŏŏ), SUE (soo), TUESDAY (tŏŏz′·dĭ). In certain words, as TONGUE, UNIQUE, PLAGUE, the terminal UE is silent.
UR	(1) As in URN, CUR, FUR, and in an accented syllable when followed by a consonant, as HURT, TURN, TUR·KEY, FUR·NISH, PUR·PLE.	ŭr
	The sound of accented ur (ŭr) is also the most frequent sound for both accented er and ir, either standing alone or followed by a consonant, as in her, term, certain, fir, bird, circle. It is not infrequent in words beginning with wor, as in word, work, world, worm, worry, worse, worth, and in spellings with our, as in courage, journey, nourish. It is also the usual sound of ear plus a consonant, as in early, learn, earth, heard.
	Although the symbol ŭr is employed in the respellings of words such as her, irk, work, turn, it is not likely that American speakers will mistake the symbol for the sound of short u (as in but) + r, for such a sound is not of normal occurrence in American speech. See Note under Rule IV.
	(2) Long u (ū) + r, that is, preceded by the consonantal sound of y, under Rule I, when followed by e in the same syllable, as in CURE, PURE, EN·DURE.	ŭr or yo͝or
	This value is retained in derivatives in which final e may be replaced by another vowel, as in EN·DUR·A·BLE, PUR·IST.
	(3) Half long u + r, when followed by e in an unaccented syllable, as in FIG·URE, FAIL·URE, and in derivatives, as FIG·UR·A·TIVE, in which the sound of y (consonant) precedes u.	yur
	(4) An obscure vowel (uh) + r, under Rule IV, in an unaccented syllable, as in PUR·LOIN, FE·MUR, SUR·PRISE.	ur
	This sound is the characteristic sound of an unaccented syllable in which r follows any vowel, as in DOL·LAR, CE·DAR, ROB·BER, O·VER, TA·PIR, E·LIX·IR, EM·PER·OR, SAIL·OR, MO·TOR, SAT·UR, ZEPH·YR.
W	As in WATER, WET, WINE. Has the effect of (u) when following a vowel, as in HOW, LAW, DEW.	w
WH	As in WHAT, WHEN, WHIP.	hw
	Many speakers in both America and England pronounce all words beginning with wh as if beginning with w alone, pronouncing which as witch, when as wen, while as wile, and so on. Careful speakers in both countries observe the distinction.
Y	(Consonant) As in YEAR, YOUNG, YET.	y
	In respellings, the use of consonantal y is sometimes employed for greater clarity; as (yoo) instead of (ū).
	(Vowel) Has all the characteristics of the vowel I.
	(1) Long, in accented syllables, under Rules I and III, as in MY, CRY, BY, MAG′·NI·FY.	ī
	(2) Short, under Rule II, as in MYTH, NYMPH.	ĭ
	The unaccented terminal Y, as in CITY, PITY, CANDY, and the plurals in IES and participles in IED—as CITIES, PITIED, CANDIED, FAMILIES—are sounded by most Americans as short i (ĭ), with no distinction, for example, between PIT·TED and PIT·IED, CAN·DID and CAN·DIED. In some regions, especially in the Northern and New England States, the sound may approach long e (ee).

FOREIGN SOUNDS

An English dictionary of this scope must include a considerable number of words or names of foreign origin. Whenever possible with reasonable accuracy, the pronunciation of such entries is indicated by English phonetics. However, certain sounds, common in some languages, have no exact equivalent in English speech and it is necessary to employ arbitrary symbols to represent them. The number of these symbols has been kept low; each is distinctive, to call immediate attention to a departure from ordinary English interpretation. The sounds represented are as follows:

eh—Vowel sounds of frequent occurrence in French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, often spelled with e, è, or é. The sounds may be identified with the English short e of get or the long a of mate.

K—Palatal consonant sounds occurring mainly in Germanic languages, often represented in the original spelling by ch, as in ach, doch, Buch, or by final g, as in Schlag, Gebirg. The sounds are approximately those of English k in book and in sick, but they are made without full contact between the back of the tongue and the roof of the mouth. The Spanish g before e or i and the Spanish j have a closely similar sound though not quite so harsh, they are customarily respelled with English h—as, JO SE (ho-zeh′)—but the h should be strongly articulated, as in uttering an emphatic who.

N—A character which indicates that the preceding vowel or vowel sound is nasalized. The sounds are approximately those characterized by n in such English words as bank, think, long, sung, if the terminal consonants were not sounded. They occur chiefly in French words in which a vowel is followed by an undoubled m or n, as in faim, encore, bon, un. The sounds are also frequent in Portuguese and certain other European languages. In Portuguese literature it may be recognized through the use of the tilde (~) over the vowel (or over one of a vowel combination) that is to be nasalized.

œ—Vowel sounds of frequent occurrence in French and in Germanic languages. In French the spelling may be eu, as in peu, deux, dieu, or œu, as in bœuf, œuvre. In German the sounds are indicated by ö, sometimes written oe, as in schön, Flote, mogen. The sounds closely resemble that of English u in burn, but are made with rounded lips and approach long a.

ü—A vowel sound of great frequency in French and in German and occurring in other European languages. It is the normal sound of u in French words, as in poulu, tube, littérature, and the sound of u, sometimes spelled ue, in German words, as in über, Stuck, Muller. The sound closely resembles that of English long e, as in reed, but is produced through rounded lips, as in saying rude.

SPECIAL EXPLANATORY NOTES

Division of Words into syllables is indicated by a centered dot (·). Unless otherwise indicated by respelling, each underscored (accented) syllable is to be pronounced as if it stood alone.

NOTE: Pronunciation of principal parts of verbs and of comparisons of adjectives and adverbs, if in agreement with the main entry, are not repeated, even though the syllabic division, in accordance with printing rules, may appear to indicate a change in the pronunciation of a terminal syllable.

An underscore beneath a syllable indicates that that syllable should be emphasized (accented) when speaking the word; as, GO ING. If two or more syllables are underscored, each is to be emphasized, and that on which the accent is more distinct is followed by the conventional accent mark (′); as, IN DE PEN′ DENCE.

If the pronunciation of a word or a part of it is not clearly evident from its spelling, the full word or enough of it to be readily identified is respelled, by simple English phonetics, in parentheses immediately following the entry; as, TROUGH (trawf); HET·ER OG′·Y·NOUS (–ŏj′·i·nus). For the values of the symbols used, see page xviii.

Words in which each syllable is sounded with almost even stress (chiefly solid compounds of two syllables, like MAIN SPRING, HEAD ACHE, BACK BITE, and most French words) do not carry an underscore.

Pronunciations as indicated are those now preferred in America. Sometimes two or more pronunciations are shown, indicating that choice in usage is divided, that some authoritative speakers favor one and that others of equal authority favor another. It is not the intent in this dictionary to express a preference nor to adjudge relative correctness. In instances in which British pronunciation differs from that in America, the British usage is labeled. Also, in foreign words not fully anglicized, both the English and foreign pronunciation, if at variance, are shown.

COMPOUND WORDS that are written with a hyphen, like CHICKEN–HEARTED, and phrases of two or more words, are not divided into syllables, for each element or word is to be found elsewhere listed. Exceptions, such as HEL TER–SKEL TER, occur when one or another of the elements is not elsewhere listed. All such compounds are shown with a hyphen of extra length, and this scheme is followed when such words appear throughout the text, with short hyphens used for syllabic breaks at the ends of lines.

HOMONYMS—words identical in spelling but differing in meaning and source—are preceded with an identifying number; as, 1POUND (weight), 2POUND (strike), 3POUND (trap). The numbering serves to simplify cross-references.

PREFIXES, SUFFIXES, AND COMBINING FORMS are defined in regular alphabetical place. A prefix is shown with the centered dot following it, as PRE·; a suffix with the centered dot before it, as ·TION. A combining form, if of the first element of a word, is followed by the centered dot, as PHONO·; if the last element, with the dot before it, as ·PHOBE.

Many compound words, formed by the addition of a prefix to the elementary words, are self-explaining through the meaning of the prefix plus that of the elementary word. Such words are listed, in this dictionary, under the entry of the prefix, the lists serving to record the words and to show the spelling. Those with extended meanings, not fully self-explaining, are shown in regular alphabetical place.

Parts of Speech are shown, in italics, immediately following an entry (or its pronunciation); as, noun, verb, adj. (adjective), adv. (adverb), prep. (preposition), conj. (conjunction), interj. (interjection). Verbs used only transitively are shown tr. verb; those used only intransitively, intr. verb; those not specifically labeled have both transitive and intransitive uses and are so defined.

The PRINCIPAL PARTS OF VERBS in which a change in spelling or form occurs are shown in heavy type within brackets immediately following the part of speech; as, BAKE verb [BAKED, BAK·ING]; REV·EL intr. verb [REV ELED or REV·ELLED, REV·EL·ING or REV·EL·LING]; DIG verb [DUG or DIGGED, DIG·GING]. In the listing of such principal parts within brackets the form of the past tense, usually the same as the form of the past participle, is shown first and is followed by the form of the present participle. With irregular verbs in which the form of the past tense differs from that of the past participle, the order within brackets is past tense, past participle, present participle; as, DRINK verb [DRANK, DRUNK or DRUNK EN, DRINK ING].

The COMPARISONS OF ADJECTIVES AND ADVERBS, if involving a change in form of spelling, are similarly shown; the comparative first within the brackets, followed by the superlative; as, HEAV Y (hĕv'·i) adj. [HEAV·I ER, HEAV I EST].

Classification of entries by such bracketed forms as [Law], [Scot.], [Pop.] indicates that the definition pertains to the usage indicated within the bracket, as law or legal usage, Scottish usage, popular usage. If the bracketed classification applies to all definitions covered by the entry—for example, all the parts of speech in which the entry may be divided—it is placed immediately after the entry or its pronunciation. If it applies to each of the definitions within one part of speech, but not to those within another, it is placed after the designation of the part of speech. If it applies to one or more of several numbered definitions, but not to all, it is placed immediately after the number of the definition to which it applies.

Variant Spellings, if within close range of the alphabetical position of the main entry, are shown in bold-faced type at the end of the definition and are not repeated in the regular alphabetical arrangement. Variants not within close alphabetical range are shown in italics at the end of the definitions and also appear as main entries in their own proper alphabetical position with a reference to the entry under which the definition is given. In all instances, the spelling of the main entry is that preferred in America.

A variant spelling or alternate term that applies to one portion of an entry, but not to all portions, as to an adjective but not to the noun, is shown at the end of the portion to which it pertains. Similarly, if the variant applies to but one of several definitions of a word, it is shown at the end of the definition to which it pertains.

Etymologies appear in brackets at the end of any given definition, following the conclusion of the last part of speech defined. For conciseness the sign (<). meaning "from" or "derived from," is employed in the etymological treatment. Thus, under RE·VIVE, the treatment [<F. revivre <L. re–, again, + vivo, live], carries the meaning that the English word revive is from the French, revivre, which is derived from the Latin prefix, re–, meaning "again," plus the Latin word vivo, meaning "live." In certain instances when the English word is identical with that of the language of origin and the meaning is unchanged, the etymological note merely indicates the language of origin; thus, under PER·SON the etymology shows only [<F.], to indicate that the word is of French origin and is unchanged in spelling and in meaning. When the English word is identical with that of the language of origin, but the English meaning has been altered in any way, the original word is not repeated and the etymological note shows only the language of source and the meaning in that language; as, under PEN·NA. [<L., feather]. Words derived in whole or in part from terms elsewhere defined in alphabetical place show that source by the use of small capital letters in the etymological treatment; as, GER′·MI·CIDE [<GERM + L. cædo, kill], or AC·RO·PHO′·BI·A [<ACRO– + PHOBIA].

Foreign Words not yet anglicized in pronunciation, meaning, or usage are identified by the abbreviation of the language of origin, in brackets, immediately following the entry, its pronunciation, and the part of speech; as, GHA·ZI (gah′·zee) noun [Ar.]; GAU LEIT·ER (gow′·lit·ur) noun [G.]. Foreign personal names are similarly classified.

Cross-references are indicated by the use of small capital letters; as, GEN E·RA Plural of GENUS; PARACHUTE TROOP See PARATROOP.

Suffixes, as ·LY and ·NESS, following the treatment of a vocabulary word, indicate that the suffix is to be added directly to the word in the main entry to form the corresponding adverb or noun. The meaning of the adverb or noun thus formed can readily be determined through reference to the respective suffixes.

Plurals that are formed regularly by the simple addition of s to the singular, as NIGHT, NIGHTS, or of es, as BOX, BOX·ES, or by the normal change of terminal y, as DU·TY, DU·TIES; the comparative and superlative of adjectives and adverbs if formed regularly; and the principal parts of regular verbs, all corresponding to the simplest rules of grammar, are not shown. Irregular formations are always shown, and are also separately listed in alphabetical place if the spelling differs notably from the elementary form.

GUIDE TO PRONUNCIATION

SYLLABLES TO BE ACCENTED ARE UNDERSCORED, AS GO ING.
IN WORDS OF TWO OR MORE ACCENTED SYLLABLES, THAT WITH HEAVIER STRESS CARRIES AN ADDITIONAL ACCENT MARK, AS IN DE PEN′ DENCE.

WORDS OR SYLLABLES THAT CONFORM WITH CHARACTERISTIC ENGLISH VALUES ARE NOT RESPELLED FOR PRONUNCIATION. FOR THE BASIC RULES GOVERNING ENGLISH PRONUNCIATION SEE RULES LISTED BELOW. SEE ALSO DEFINITION 2 UNDER EACH LETTER OF THE ALPHABET FOR ITS PRONUNCIATION AND THAT OF DIGRAPHS. A LIST OF "NORMAL ENGLISH VALUES" IS SHOWN UNDER PRONUNCIATION," PAGE XIII, INCLUDING, FOR EXAMPLE:

ai—normally long a as in pain, pair ar—normally sounded as in car, market
au—normally sounded as in fault, auto ea—normally long e, as in meat, near oa—normally long o, as in coat, coarse or—normally sounded as in for, order ur—normally sounded as in fur, turkey
c—normally equal to k before a, o, u, l, and r, as in cat
c—normally equal to s before e, i, and y, as in city ch—normally sounded as in chin, each ph—normally equal to f, as in photograph

IN THE RESPELLING OF WORDS OR SYLLABLES FOR PRONUNCIATION, CHARACTERISTIC ENGLISH VALUES ARE SUBSTITUTED, AS:

ah—for a as in father
aw—for a as in ball
j—for g as in gem, gin
k—for ch as in chorus
ng—for n as in sink, finger
ow—for spellings of the sound in cow, now, bough th—(roman) for the sound in think, three th—(italic) for the sound in this, then, they uh—for spellings of the sound of a in about, e in system, o in consent: often written as u, as in the phonetic respelling of nation (nay′·shun)
z—for s as in easy
zh—for z as in azure, s as in measure

THE FAMILIAR MACRON (–) INDICATES THE LONG SOUND OF THE VOWELS, AND THE BREVE (⏑) THE SHORT SOUND, AS:

māy, fāre, ēve, hēre, īce, fīre, gō, fōre, fōod, cūte, cūre mȳ
băt, părish, hĕn, vĕry, sĭt, mĭrror, nŏt, sŏrrow, fo͝ot, po͝or, shu͝t

FOREIGN SOUNDS: THE PRONUNCIATION OF CERTAIN NON-ENGLISH SOUNDS IS INDICATED BY THE FOLLOWING DEVICES:

ch = French e, é and è, and Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish e: a vowel sound frequently pronounced in English as long a (ā), but approaching short e (ĕ).
K = ch in German ach, Scottish loch: approximately English k in book, but without full contact between the back of the tongue and the roof of the mouth.
N = n in French bon, the preceding vowel or vowel sound nasalized: approximately English n in honk.
œ = oe in French boeuf, o in German schon: approximately English u in burn, but with lips rounded.
u = u in French poilu, u in German uber: approximately English ee in reed, but with lips rounded as in saying rude.

Rule I In an accented syllable ending in a vowel, the vowel has its long sound; as, BA·SIN, PE·I·TY, RE·LI·A BLE, MO MENT, MU SIC, HY·DRO GEN.
Exceptions to this rule (as FA·THER) are respelled.

Rule II In an accented syllable terminating in a consonant (see note in Rule III) the vowel has its short sound; as, MAG NET, COM·PEL, CIT·Y, DE MOC RA CY, RE·PUB LIC, MYS·TE RY.
Seeming exceptions not respelled include the derivatives of verbs in which, by Rule III, the main vowel of the final syllable is long. The vowel remains long in the derivatives although, in conformance with printing practice, the division of the word does not so indicate; as, BAKE, BAK·ER, BAK·ING; CON·SOLE, CON·SOL·ING, CON SOL·A·BLE.

Rule III Final silent E following a single consonant of an accented syllable indicates that the preceding vowel in that syllable characteristically has its long sound; as TAME, CON·VENE, IN·VITE, PRO·MOTE, DIS·PUTE, STYLE. NOTE: When the single consonant is the letter R, the quality of the sound of the preceding vowel is distinctly altered. See discussions under AR, ER, IR, OR, UR, in the Normal Interpretation of English spelling on pages xi, xii, xiii.

Rule IV In ordinary conversation the vowel in an unaccented syllable tends to become weakened or obscure; the vowels A, O, and U approach (uh), as in *a*bout, final, connect, opinion, careful; the vowels E and I approach (i) or (uh), as in decide, emblem, emigrate, civil.

Rule V Doubled consonants approximate a single sound which is regarded as a part of the accented syllable, as in MAT TER, DIF FER ENT, PEP·PER.

Rule VI In solid compound words composed of two monosyllabic words, as BOOK·CASE, BAG·MAN, BASE·STOP, SPELL·BIND, DOWN STAIRS, DRAW BRIDGE, each element retains its original pronunciation and the first element usually has a slightly heavier stress. HENCE: In this dictionary neither element of the words in this category carry a mark for stress, as each would require it. In derivatives, however, as SPELL′·BIND·ER, the stresses are shown. Compounds in which the connection is by hyphen carry the pronunciations and stresses of the respective separate elements.

PART I

FUNK & WAGNALLS

NEW PRACTICAL Standard DICTIONARY

A, a [AEs, A's, As pl.] 1 The first letter of the English alphabet: from Phenician aleph, through the Hebrew aleph, Greek alpha, and Roman A. 2 Any sound of the letter a. In English it is variously pronounced:—long, as in ape, gate; short, as in fat, hammer; broad, as in arm, art, father; intermediate between short and broad, as in ask, chance, path, etc.; moderately long and dropping into ĕ, as in care, bare, bear, various; like the aw or au in awl and haul, in such words as ball, quart, swarm, walk, etc.; obscure, as in unaccented initial and final syllables, and certain final closed syllables, as in absent, sofa, loyal. It is frequently silent after e and o, as in bread, foam, etc. See ALPHABET, TYPOGRAPHY.

— symbol 1 Primacy in class or order; as, A 1 (at Lloyd's), or first class; as a numeral, one; as, section A. 2 In music, one of a series of tones, the sixth in the natural diatonic scale of C, or the first note in the relative minor scale; also, a standard for tuning instruments; the pitch of this tone; the written note representing it; the scale built upon A. 3 In chemistry, argon (A). à bandon, in the power] — A·BAN'DON·A·BLE adj. A·BAN'DON·ER noun — A·BAN'DON·MENT noun.

Synonyms (verb): abdicate, abjure, cease, cede, desert, discontinue, forgo, forsake, forswear, leave, quit, recant, relinquish, renounce, repudiate, resign, retract, surrender, vacate. Abandon denotes the complete and final giving up, letting go, or withdrawal from persons or things of any kind, abdicate and resign apply to office, authority, or power; cede to territorial possessions; surrender especially to military force, and more generally to any demand, claim, passion, etc. Quit carries an idea of suddenness or abruptness not necessarily implied in abandon, and may not have the same suggestion of finality. Relinquish commonly implies reluctance, the creditor relinquishes his claim. Abandon implies previous association with responsibility for or control of, forsake implies previous association with inclination or attachment, a man may abandon or forsake home or friends, he abandons an enterprise. Forsake, like abandon, may be used either in the favorable or unfavorable sense, desert is commonly unfavorable, except when used of localities, as, "The Deserted Village", a soldier deserts his po While a monarch abd a pre lent or other elected or appointed officer resigns. REFOUNCE Antonyms adopt, advocate, assert, cherish, claim, court, defend, favor, haunt, hold, keep, maintain, occupy, prosecute, protect, pursue, reclaim, seek, support, undertake, uphold, vindicate.

A·BAN'DONED (-dund) adj. 1 Given over (in a bad sense); extremely profligate; shameless, dissolute. 2 Deserted, left behind, forsaken. See synonyms under ADDICTED, BAD.

À BAS (ah bah') [F.] Down with: opposed to vive.

A·BASE' tr. verb [A·BASED' (-bāst'), A·BAS'ING] 1 To lower in position, rank, estimation, etc.; cast down; humble. 2 [Obs.] To reduce in value, as coin: debase now preferred. [<L. ad, to, + BASE] — A·BAS'ED·LY adv. — A·BAS'ED·NESS noun — A·BAS'ER noun — A·BASE'MENT noun

Synonyms: debase, degrade, depress, discredit, disgrace, dishonor, humble, humiliate, lower, reduce, sink. Abase refers only to outward conditions. Debase applies to quality or character. The coinage is debased by excess of alloy, the man by vice. Humble refers chiefly to feeling of heart; humiliate to outward conditions. To disgrace is chiefly applied to deserved moral odium; he disgraced himself by his conduct. To dishonor a person is to deprive him of honor that should or might be given. To discredit one is to injure his reputation. Degrade may refer to station, as, an officer is degraded by being reduced to the ranks; but it is now chiefly used of character, as, drunkenness is a degrading vice. Antonyms: advance, aggrandize, dignify, elevate, exalt, honor, promote, raise, uplift.

A·BASH' tr. verb [A·BASHED' (-basht'), A·BASH'ING] To deprive of self-possession, disconcert, discomfit; make ashamed; confuse; embarrass. [<OF. esbahir, astonish] — A·BASH'ED·LY adv. — A·BASH'MENT noun.

Synonyms: bewilder, chagrin, confound, confuse, daunt, discompose, disconcert, dishearten, embarrass, humble, humiliate, mortify, overawe, shame. Any sense of inferiority abashes, with or without the sense of wrong. The poor are abashed at the splendor of wealth, the ignorant at the learning of the scholar. To confuse is to bring into a state of mental bewilderment, to confound is to overwhelm the mental faculties, to daunt is to subject to a certain degree of fear. Confusion is of the intellect, embarrassment (as here considered) is of the feelings. A witness may be embarrassed by annoying remarks or questions so as to become confused in statements. To mortify a person is to bring upon him a painful sense of humiliation. The parent is mortified by the child's rudeness, the child abashed at the parent's reproof. The embarrassed speaker finds it difficult to proceed. The mob is overawed by the military, the hypocrite shamed by exposure. See EMBARRASS. Compare CHAGRIN. Antonyms: animate, buoy, cheer, embolden, encourage, inspirit, rally, uphold.

A·BA'SI·A (-bāy'zhi·uh or -zhuh or -zī·uh) noun Inability to coordinate the action of the muscles in walking. [< Gr. a-, not, + basis, rhythmical movement] — A·BA'SIC adj.

AB·A·TAGE' (ab uh·tahj') noun 1 Demolition, destruction, especially by high explosives: a military term. 2 The anchoring of a piece of artillery. 3 The destruction of diseased horses. [< F. abattre, demolish, knock down]

A·BATE' verb [A·BAT'ED, A·BAT'ING] 1 To make or become less; decrease; diminish, moderate, slacken; reduce. 2 [Law] To do away with; annul; remit, also, to become void; fail. 3 To deduct, as part of a price. [< OF abatre <L. ad, to, + batuo, beat] — A·BAT'A·BLE (uh·bāt'-) adj. — A·BATE'MENT noun — A·BAT'ER (uh·bāt'-) noun.

Synonyms: decline, decrease, diminish, ebb, lessen, lower, mitigate, moderate, reduce, relax, subside. See ABOLISH, ALLAY, ALLEVIATE. Antonyms: aggravate, augment, enhance, increase, intensify.

AB·A·TIS' (ab·uh·tee' or ab'·uh·tis) noun An obstruction of felled trees or bent saplings pointed in the direction of expected attack, sometimes interwoven with barbed wire. Also AB·AT·TIS'. [< F. abattre, to fell]

A·BOR TIVE (-tiv) adj. 1 Brought forth or born prematurely; hence, imperfectly developed, rudimentary; as, an abortive organ or stamen. 2 Coming to naught; failing. 3 Causing abortion; shortening in course; as, abortive treatment of fever. See synonyms under USELESS, VAIN. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

A·BOU·KIR′ Same as ABUKIR.

A·BOU·LI·A, A·BOU LIC Same as ABULIA, etc.

A·BOUND intr. verb 1 To be in abundance; be plentiful. 2 To have plenty of; teem: with in or with. See synonyms under FLOW. Compare AMPLE. [<L. ab, from, + unda, wave]

A·BOUT adv. 1 Around the outside; on every side; as, blessings compass thee about. 2 Almost; as, about finished; approximately; as, in about an hour. 3 Around, in revolution or rotation; as, turn and turn about. 4 In any direction; toward any, every, or the opposite side; as, to look or move about. 5 Hither and thither; to and fro; as, to wander about.

— prep. 1 On the outside or on every side of; all around; encircling; as, walls about the city. 2 Here and there in; over; as, flowers growing about the fields. 3 Close to; somewhere near; as, about nine o'clock. 4 In connection with; engaged in; in reference to; concerning; on account of; as, about my business. 5 At the point of; ready to: with gerund or infinitive; as, about to speak. 6 Pertaining to; of; as, a story about a bear. See synonyms under AT. [<OE. abutan]

ABOUT-FACE noun 1 A drill movement executed at the command "About face!" by placing the right foot behind the left and pivoting around to the right. 2 Hence, any turning around or reversal, as of opinion or point of view. — intr. verb To perform an about-face, face in the opposite direction; change one's ideas, ways, etc.

ABOUT-SHIP intr. verb To change the course by going on the opposite tack.

A BOVE (-būv′) adv. 1 Vertically up; overhead; higher up; on the upper side. 2 Superior in rank or position. 3 In an earlier place; as, in the paragraph above.

— prep. Vertically over; on the top of; upon; in excess of; superior to; beyond; free from the reach, power, or influence of; not liable to.

— adj. Given, said, placed, etc., in what is above; preceding.

— noun That which precedes or is just before: by ellipsis of some noun, as statement, etc. [<OE. abufan]

Synonyms (prep.): on, over, upon. Above is the most inclusive of these prepositions. It can ordinarily be substituted for on, upon, or over; as, the boards were piled one on or upon another (one above another), the hawk flies over the wood (above the wood). But it will be seen that while above is more inclusive it is less definite; the boards laid one on another are in contact, but when laid one above another, they may not touch. Over contains often an intimation of extension or motion across, while above may simply imply greater elevation. If we say, the mountain towers above the plain, we think only of its height, but if we say, the mountain towers over the plain, we think of the plain as in the shadow of the mountain and dominated by it. So we say the mountain is 7,000 feet above the sea, where it would be impossible to say 7,000 feet over the sea. Upon is practically identical with on, preference of either over the other being generally for euphonic reasons. Antonyms: see BENEATH.

A BOVE′ BOARD (uh būv′-) adj. & adv. In open sight; hence, without concealment, fraud, or trickery; honest. See synonyms under CANDID.

AB SO·LUTE (-lūte or -lōōt) adj. 1 Free from restriction or relation; unlimited; independent; unconditional, as, an absolute monarchy. 2 Complete, perfect. 3 Unadulterated; pure. 4 Positive; entire; total; unquestionable. 5 In grammar, free from the usual relations of syntax or construction with other words; as, ablative absolute. 6 In physics, not dependent on any arbitrary standard; non-relative; specifically determined or measured only by the fundamental notions of space, mass, and time; as, absolute measurement; also, relating to the absolute-temperature scale; as, 15° absolute.

— noun That which is absolute or perfect. — THE ABSOLUTE The ultimate basis of all thought, reasoning, or being; God. [< L. absolutus < absolvo; see ABSOLVE] — AB'·SO LUTE LY or, for emphasis, AB SO LUTE'·LY adv. — AB'·SO·LUTE·NESS noun.

Synonyms (adj.): arbitrary, autocratic, despotic, infinite, perfect, pure, supreme, tyrannical, unconditional, unequivocal. As used of human authorities, absolute signifies free from limitation by other authority and supreme exalted over all other; as, an absolute monarch, the supreme court. As absolute power in human hands is usually abused, the unfavorable meaning of the word predominates. Autocratic power is absolute power self-established and self-maintained. Despotic is commonly applied to a masterful or severe use of power, which is expressed more decidedly by tyrannical. Arbitrary may be used in a good sense; as, the pronunciation of proper names is arbitrary; but the bad sense is the prevailing one; as, an arbitrary proceeding, arbitrary power. Compare ARBITRARY, DESPOTIC, IMPERIOUS, INFINITE, PERFECT. Antonyms: accountable, conditional, conditioned, constitutional, limited, responsible, restrained.

AB SO LU' TION noun 1 An absolving, or a being absolved; forgiveness. 2 In the Roman Catholic Church, the act of a priest pronouncing the remission of sin, its eternal punishment, or the canonical penalties attached to it; the act of releasing from censure without the sacrament of penance; or a solemn rite performed at the end of a requiem mass. 3 In other churches, the declaration or imploring of God's forgiveness by a priest or minister; also, the forgiveness itself.

AB' SO LU TISM noun 1 The doctrine or practice of unlimited authority and control; despotism; predestination. 2 Absoluteness; positiveness. — AB' SO LU·TIST noun — AB·SO LU TIS' TIC adj.

AB SOL' U TO RY adj. Having power to absolve; absolving.

AB SOLVE tr. verb [AB SOLVED, AB·SOLV·ING] 1 To set free, as from obligation, liability, or guilt; acquit. 2 To free from sin or its penalties; forgive, pardon. [< L. ab, from, + solvo, loose] — AB SOLV A·BLE adj. — AB SOLV' A·TO RY adj. — AB·SOLV·ENT adj. & noun — AB·SOLV ER noun.

Synonyms: acquit, clear, discharge, exculpate, exempt, exonerate, forgive, free, justify, liberate, pardon, release. To absolve, in the strict sense, is to set free from any bond. One may be absolved from a promise by a breach of faith on the part of one to whom the promise was made. To absolve from sins is formally to remit their condemnation and penalty. To acquit of sin or crime is to free from the accusation of it; the innocent are rightfully acquitted; the guilty may be mercifully absolved. Compare JUSTIFY, PARDON. Antonyms: accuse, bind, charge, compel, condemn, convict, impeach, inculpate, obligate, oblige.

AB SO·NANT adj. Discordant; unreasonable. [< AB- + L. sonans; see SONANT]

AB SORB tr. verb 1 To drink in or suck up, as through or into pores; as, a sponge absorbs water. 2 To engross completely; occupy wholly; as, study absorbs him. 3 To take up or in by chemical or molecular action, as gases, heat, light, etc., or as in the processes of nutrition and growth. 4 To engulf; take in and incorporate; as, the city absorbs the suburbs. 5 To lessen the force of (a reaction); intercept; as, a spring absorbs a jar or jolt. 6 To take up entirely by purchase or use, as an issue of bonds or the output of a factory. [< L. ab, from, + sorbeo, suck in] — AB·SORB·A·BIL'·I TY noun — AB·SORB·A·BLE adj. — AB·SORB·ING·LY adv.

Synonyms: consume, engross, exhaust, imbibe, swallow. A fluid that is absorbed is taken up into the mass of the absorbing body, with which it may or may not permanently combine. A substance is consumed which is appropriated by some other substance, being, or agency, so that it ceases to exist or to be recognized as existing in its original condition; fuel is consumed in the fire, food in the body; consume also means to buy and use up, as an individual or the public consumes coal. A great talker engrosses his listeners. A credulous person swallows the most preposterous statement. A busy student is absorbed in a subject that takes his whole attention. Antonyms: disgorge, disperse, dissipate, distract, eject, emit, exude, radiate, vomit.

AB·SORBED adj. 1 Deeply engrossed; rapt. 2 Sucked up or sunken in, as paint on a porous surface. See synonyms under ABSTRACTED. — AB·SORB·ED·LY adv. — AB SORB ED·NESS noun.

AB SOR·BE·FA′·CIENT (-bĭ·fāy′·shĕnt) adj. Causing absorption or drying up. — noun A substance causing or promoting absorption.

AB SOR·BENT adj. Absorbing or tending to absorb. — noun A substance, duct, etc., that absorbs. — AB SOR BEN·CY noun.

AB SORB ER noun One who or that which absorbs; specifically, a part, as in a caloric engine, having the function of absorbing heat and giving it out later; a regenerator; also, in an automobile spring, a device for absorbing the shock or jar of a machine in motion, called a shock-absorber.

AB SORP TION noun 1 The act of absorbing; the condition of being absorbed; specifically, in physics, the act of absorbing light. 2 Assimilation, as by incorporation or by the digestive process. 3 Engrossment of the mind; preoccupation. — AB·SORP·TIVE (-tiv) adj. — AB SORP·TIVE·NESS, AB SORP·TIV′ I TY noun.

ABSORPTION SPECTRUM A spectrum which, by characteristic dark lines, indicates the presence of a substance absorbing certain wave-lengths of a continuous spectrum; distinguished from emission spectrum.

ABS QUE HOC (ăb′·kwee hŏc) Without this.

AB STAIN intr. verb To keep oneself back; refrain voluntarily: with from. See synonyms under CEASE, REFRAIN. [<L. abstineo <abs, from, + teneo, hold]

AB·STAIN ER noun One who abstains; a teetotaler.

AB STE MI OUS (-stee′·mi·us) adj. 1 Eating and drinking sparingly. 2 Characterized by or spent in abstinence; avoiding excess; self-denying; temperate. See synonyms under SOBER. [< L. abs-, from, + temetum, intoxicating drink] — LY adv. — NESS noun.

AB STEN TION noun A refraining or abstaining. — AB·STEN·TIOUS (-shus) adj.

AB STER GENT (-jent) adj. Cleansing. — noun A cleansing substance.

AB STI NENCE noun The act or practice of abstaining; forbearing voluntarily, especially from intoxicating drinks; self-denial. [<L. abstinentia <abstineo, abstain]

Synonyms: abstemiousness, continence, fasting, frugality, moderation, self-control, self-denial, self-restraint, sobriety, temperance. Abstinence from food commonly signifies going without; abstemiousness, partaking moderately; abstinence may be for a single occasion, abstemiousness is habitual moderation. Self-denial is giving up what one wishes, abstinence may be refraining from what one does not desire. Fasting is abstinence from food for a limited time, and generally for religious reasons. Sobriety and temperance signify moderate indulgence. Total abstinence has come to signify the entire abstaining from intoxicating liquors. Antonyms: drunkenness, excess, gluttony, greed, intemperance, intoxication, reveling, revelry, self-indulgence, sensuality, wantonness.

AB·STRACT adj. 1 Considered apart from the concrete; general, as opposed to particular; theoretical; ideal, as opposed to practical. 2 Considered or expressed without reference to particular example, as numbers, attributes, qualities, etc.; as, 8 is an abstract number; redness, valor are abstract nouns. 3 Withdrawn from contemplation of present objects; abstracted. 4 In philosophy, dissociated from closely applied perceptions or ideas; general, as opposed to particular; as, abstract truth. 5 In art, generalized or universal, as opposed to concrete, specific, or representational; tending away from the realistic or literal.

— noun 1 A summary or epitome. 2 In law, a compendium. 3 In logic, an abstract idea or term. 4 In grammar, an abstract noun, as virtue, goodness, etc. 5 In pharmacy, a special preparation of a drug in powder. See synonyms under ABBREVIATION, ABRIDGMENT. — IN THE ABSTRACT Apart from concrete relation or embodiment; in its general reference or meaning; abstractly.

— AB·STRACT verb 1 To take away; remove; purloin. 2 To withdraw; be apart; separate. 3 To withdraw the attention of; divert. 4 To separate in thought (attributes, etc.) 5 To make an abstract of (a book, treatise, etc.); abridge; epitomize. 6 To extract, as by distillation. [<L. abstractus <abs-, from, + traho, draw] — AB·STRACT·ER noun — AB·STRACT·LY adv. — AB·STRACT·NESS noun.

Synonyms (verb): detach, disengage, divide, draw, purloin, remove, separate, steal, withdraw. The central idea of withdrawing makes abstract in common speech a euphemism for purloin, steal. In mental processes, we separate some one element from all that does not necessarily belong to it, abstract it, and view it alone. The mind is abstracted when it is withdrawn from all other subjects and concentrated upon one. Antonyms: add, increase, insert, interpose, restore, unite.

AB·STRACT ED adj. 1 Absent-minded. 2 Separated from all else; apart; abstruse. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

Synonyms: absent, absent-minded, absorbed, heedless, inattentive, oblivious, preoccupied. As regards mental action, absorbed, abstracted, and preoccupied refer to the cause, absent or absent-minded to the effect. The man absorbed in one thing will appear absent in others. The absent-minded man is oblivious of ordinary matters, because his thoughts are elsewhere. One who is preoccupied is intensely busy in thought; one may be absent-minded simply through inattention, with fitful and aimless wandering of thought. Compare ABSTRACT. Antonyms: alert, attentive.

ABSTRACT IDEA In psychology, the schematized mental representation of any quality, combination of qualities, or relation.

AB STRAC·TION noun 1 State of being abstracted; an abstracting. 2 An abstract idea; a theory. 3 Separation; removal; theft. 4 Absence of mind; preoccupation. 5 Seclusion of life, as by a hermit; withdrawal from worldly objects. 6 The quality that makes a work of art generalized or universal, as distinguished from literal or concrete, present in varying degrees in widely differing art forms; an art form or a work of art in which the qualities are either predominantly or totally abstract: opposed to naturalism, realism. There are two basic manifestations: one which seeks to draw the essence from the natural world (called TRUE or NEAR ABSTRACTION) the other unrelated to the natural world, sometimes called PURE ABSTRACTION. Compare CUBISM, NON-OBJECTIVE ART, SURREALISM.

AB STRAC·TIVE (-tiv) adj. Of, pertaining to, or tending to abstraction; having the power of abstraction; epitomizing. — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

AB·STRIC·TION noun A process of spore-formation in certain fungi, in which the sporophore becomes constricted by septa at the place of division. [<AB- + L. strictio <stringo, bind]

AB STRUSE (-strōōs′) adj. 1 Hard to understand. 2 [Obs.] Hidden; concealed. See synonyms under COMPLEX, MYSTERIOUS, OBSCURE. [<L. abs, from, + trudo, push] — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

AB·SURD (-sûrd′) adj. Opposed to manifest reason or truth; irrational; preposterous; ridiculous. [<L. ab- intensive + surdus, deaf] — ·LY adv. — ·NESS noun.

Synonyms: anomalous, foolish, incorrect, irrational, ludicrous, mistaken, monstrous, nonsensical, paradoxical, preposterous, ridiculous, senseless, stupid, unreasonable, wild. That is absurd which is contrary to the first principles of reasoning; as, that a part should be greater than the whole is absurd. A paradoxical statement appears at first thought contradictory or absurd, while it may be really true. Anything is irrational when clearly contrary to sound reason, foolish when contrary to practical good sense, unreasonable when there seems a perverse bias or an intent to go wrong. Monstrous and preposterous refer to what is overwhelmingly absurd. The ridiculous or the nonsensical is worthy only to be laughed at. Compare INCONGRUOUS. Antonyms: consistent, demonstrable, established, incontestable, incontrovertible, indisputable, indubitable, logical, rational, reasonable, sagacious, sensible, sound, substantial, true, undeniable, unquestionable, wise.

AB SURD·I·TY noun [·TIES pl.] 1 The quality of being absurd. 2 Something absurd.

AC·CES·SO RY (ăc·sĕs′·uh·rĭ) noun [·RIES pl.] 1 A person or thing that aids subordinately; an adjunct; appurtenance; accompaniment. 2 Hence, in the plural, such items of apparel as complete an outfit, as gloves, a scarf, hat, handbag, etc. 3 [Law] A person who, even if not present, is concerned, either before or after, in the perpetration of a felony below the crime of treason. See also note under ACCESSARY.

—adj. 1 Aiding the principal design, or assisting subordinately the chief agent, as in the commission of a crime. 2 Contributory; supplemental; additional; as, accessory nerves. Also AC·CES·SA·RY. [<L. accedo; see ACCEDE] —AC·CES SO·RI·LY adv. —AC·CES·SO·RI NESS noun.

Synonyms (noun): abetter or abettor, accomplice, ally, assistant, associate, attendant, coadjutor, colleague, companion, confederate, follower, helper, henchman, participator, partner, retainer. Colleague is used always in a good sense, associate and coadjutor generally so; ally, assistant, associate, attendant, companion, helper, either in a good or a bad sense; abettor, accessory, accomplice, confederate, almost always in a bad sense. In law, an abettor (the general legal spelling) is always present, either actively or constructively, at the commission of the crime; an accessory never. An accomplice is usually a principal; an accessory never. If present, though only to stand outside and keep watch against surprise, one is an abettor, and not an accessory. At common law, an accessory implies a principal, and cannot be convicted until after the conviction of the principal; the accomplice or abettor can be convicted as a principal. Accomplice and abettor have nearly the same meaning, but the former is the popular, the latter the legal term. Compare APPENDAGE, AUXILIARY. Antonyms: adversary, antagonist, betrayer, chief, commander, enemy, foe, hinderer, instigator, leader, opponent, principal, rival.

ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT A person who, knowing a felony to have been committed, comforts, conceals, or assists the felon.

AC·CIAC·CA·TU′·RA (ah·chahk·cah·toō′·rah) noun [It.] 1 A short clear appoggiatura. 2 An ornament, still retained in some organ music, in which the principal note is sustained while the note below is struck for an instant only.

AC·CI·DENCE noun 1 That part of grammar that treats of the accidents or inflections of words; also, a book dealing with the rudiments of grammar. 2 The rudiments or elements of any art or science. [<accidents, pl. of ACCIDENT (inflection)]

AC·CI·DENT noun 1 Anything that happens by chance; anything occurring unexpectedly, undesignedly, or without known or assignable cause; a contingency; especially, any unpleasant or unfortunate occurrence involving injury, loss, suffering, or death; a casualty; mishap. 2 Any non-essential circumstance or attribute. 3 In grammar, an inflection, such as of case, gender, number, etc. 4 In logic, any feature, element, or accompaniment of an object not essential to the conception of it. [<L. accido, happen, <ad, upon, + cado, fall]

Synonyms: adventure, calamity, casualty, chance, contingency, disaster, fortuity, hap, happening, hazard, incident, misadventure, misfortune, mishap, possibility. An accident is that which happens without anyone's direct intention, a chance that which happens without any known cause. An incident is viewed as occurring in the regular course of things, but subordinate to the main purpose, or aside from the main design. Fortune and chance are nearly equivalent, but chance can be used of human effort and endeavor as fortune cannot be; we say "there is one chance in a thousand"; as personified, we speak of fickle Fortune, blind Chance. Since the unintended is often the undesirable, accident tends to signify some calamity or disaster, but we may speak of a fortunate or happy accident. An adventure is that which may turn out ill, a misadventure that which does turn out ill. A slight disturbing accident is a mishap. Compare CATASTROPHE, EVENT, HAZARD. Antonyms: appointment, calculation, certainty, decree, fate, forecordination, intention, law, necessity, ordainment, ordinance, plan, preparation, provision, purpose.

AL LUDE (a lude') intr verb [AL LUD ED, AL LUD ING] To refer (to something) without express mention, make indirect reference. [<L. ad, at, to, + ludo, play]

Synonyms advert, hint, imply, indicate, insinuate, intimate, mention, point, refer, signify, suggest. Allude is erroneously used in the general sense of mention or speak of. We allude to a matter slightly, in passing; we advert to it when we turn from our path to treat it; we refer to it by any clear utterance or expression. One may hint at a thing in a friendly way, but what is insinuated is always unfavorable, generally both hostile and cowardly. One may indicate his wishes, intimate his plans, imply his opinion, signify his will, suggest a course of action. Compare SUGGESTION.

AL LURE verb [AL LURED, AL·LUR ING] To draw with or as with a lure; attract or exercise attraction, entice, tempt, used with by, from, to. —noun The act of alluring, or that which allures. [<OF. aluer] — AL LUR ER noun.

Synonyms (verb). attract, cajole, captivate, coax, decoy, draw, entice, inveigle, lure, seduce, tempt, win. One may attract without intent. One may allure to evil, but ordinarily to good. Lure is more akin to the physical nature and commonly used in an unfavorable sense. To tempt is to endeavor to lead one wrong; to seduce is to succeed in winning one from good to ill. Win may be used in a good sense, in which it surpasses the highest sense of allure, because it succeeds in that which allure attempts. Coax expresses the attraction of the person, not of the thing. A man may be coaxed to that which is by no means alluring. Cajole and decoy carry the idea of deceiving and ensnaring. To inveigle is to lead one blindly, as into folly or wrong. See DRAW, PERSUADE. Antonyms: chill, damp, deter, dissuade, repel, warn.

[1] The names of the trees and shrubs enclosed within parentheses in this column are the translations of the names of the letters.

[2] H is an auxiliary letter used to express aspiration and prevent hiatus. Aspiration is usually represented by a dot, as in ua͘t but when transliterated into roman, the dot is replaced by h in all cases, as uath.

In each column the characters of the alphabets are given first (followed by the lower-case characters in Columns 3, 4, 5, and 6), and are followed by the names of the characters in the Arabic, Hebrew, Greek, and Irish. The last row in each column shows the equivalent English sound represented by the character. The variant names of the Hebrew characters and the pronunciations of the names of the Hebrew and Greek characters are given throughout the text: under aleph, bet, gimel, etc., alpha, beta, gamma, etc. In the names of the Arabic characters ā has the value of ah, ī of ee, and ū of oo.

See synonyms under BRUTISH. [<L. <anima, breath]

Synonyms (noun): beast, brute, fauna. An animal is a sentient being, distinct from inanimate matter and from vegetable life on the one side and from mental and spiritual existence on the other. Thus man is properly classified as an animal, but to call any individual man an animal is to imply that the animal nature has undue supremacy. The brute is the animal viewed as dull to all finer feeling; the beast is looked upon as a being of appetites. Creature is a word of wide signification, including inanimate objects, plants, animals, angels, or men as divinely created. The animals of a region are collectively called its fauna. Antonyms: angel, man, matter, mind, mineral, soul, spirit, vegetable.

Synonyms (noun): ally, chum, coadjutor, colleague, companion, comrade, consort, fellow, friend, helpmate, mate, partner, peer. An associate, as used officially, implies a chief, leader, or principal, to whom the associate is not fully equal in rank. Associate is popularly used of mere friendly relations, but often implies some work, enterprise, or pursuit in which the associated persons unite. We rarely speak of associates in crime or wrong, using confederates or accomplices instead. Companion gives itself with equal readiness to the good or the evil sense. Peer implies equality rather than companionship; as, a jury of his peers. Comrade expresses more fellowship and good feeling than companion. Consort is a word of equality and dignity, as applied especially to the marriage relation. Compare ACCESSORY, ACQUAINTANCE, FRIENDSHIP. Antonyms: antagonist, enemy, foe, hinderer, opponent, opposer, rival, stranger.

AS·SO CI·A′·TION (-sī- or -shī·āy′·shun) noun 1 The act of associating, or the state of being associated; fellowship; combination for a common purpose. 2 Connection of ideas in thought; also, the process or faculty by which they are connected; associative power, in psychology, that process in reproduction in which past cognitions are brought back through connection with something present in the mind. 3 A body of persons associated for some common purpose; corporation; society; partnership. 4 Correlation of nervous functions involving a high degree of modifiability and also consciousness. 5 Aggregate, as of molecules, to form a complex; as, dihydrol, $(H_2O)_2$, an association of two molecules.

AS SUME (-sūme′) tr. verb [AS·SUMED, AS SUM·ING] 1 To take upon oneself; as, to assume a haughty mien; also, to undertake. 2 To take for granted; suppose; hence, to affect; pretend. 3 To take up or into, as into partnership, employment, or the like. [<L. ad, to, + sumo, take] —AS SUM·A BLE (ă·sume′-) adj.

Synonyms: accept, affect, appropriate, arrogate, claim, feign, postulate, presume, pretend, take, usurp. The distinctive idea of assume is to take by one's own independent volition, whether well or ill, rightfully or wrongfully. One may accept an obligation or assume an authority that properly belongs to him; if he assumes what does not belong to him, he is said to arrogate or usurp it. A man may usurp the substance of power in the most unpretending way; what he arrogates to himself he assumes with a haughty and overbearing manner. If he takes to himself the credit and appearance of qualities he does not possess, he is said to affect or feign, or to pretend to, the character he thus assumes. What a debater postulates he openly states and takes for granted without proof; what he assumes he may take for granted without mention. What a man claims he asserts his right to take; what he assumes he takes. See PRETEND. Antonyms: see synonyms for RENOUNCE.

Synonyms: arrogance, assertion, assumption, boldness, confidence, effrontery, impudence, presumption, self-assertion, self-confidence, self-reliance, trust. Confidence is founded upon reasons; assurance is largely a matter of feeling. In the bad sense, assurance is a vicious courage, with belief of one's ability to outwit or defy others; it is less gross than impudence, which is (according to its etymology) a shameless boldness. Assurance appears in act or manner; impudence, in speech. Effrontery is impudence defiantly displayed. Compare BELIEF, CERTAINTY, EFFRONTERY, FAITH, IMPUDENCE, PRIDE. Antonyms: bashfulness, confusion, consternation, dismay, distrust, doubt, hesitancy, misgiving, shyness, timidity.

AS·SURE (-shōōr′) tr. verb [AS·SURED, AS·SUR·ING] 1 To offer assurances to; hence, to give confidence to; convince. 2 To insure. 3 To make certain; guarantee. [<F. attaquer for attacher, attach]

Synonyms (verb): assail, assault, beleaguer, beset, besiege, charge, combat, encounter, invade. To attack is to begin hostilities of any kind. Assail and assault, while of the same original etymology, have diverged in meaning, so that assault alone retains the meaning of direct personal violence. One may assail another with reproaches; he assaults him with a blow, a brandished weapon, etc. To encounter is to meet face to face, and may be said either of the attacking or of the resisting force or person, or of both. Antonyms: aid, befriend, cover, defend, protect, resist, shelter, shield, support, sustain, uphold, withstand.

Synonyms (noun): aggression, assault, encroachment, incursion, infringement, intrusion, invasion, onset, onslaught, trespass. An attack may be by word; an aggression is always by deed, upon rights, possessions, etc. An invasion of a nation's territories is an act of aggression; an intrusion upon a neighboring estate is a trespass. Onslaught signifies intensely violent assault, as by an army or a desperado, but it is sometimes used of violent speech. See AGGRESSION. Antonyms: defense, repulsion, resistance, retreat, submission, surrender.

Synonyms (noun): action, affair, bout, combat, conflict, contest, encounter, engagement, fight, skirmish, strife. Conflict is a general word which describes opponents, whether individuals or hosts, as dashed together. One continuous conflict between entire armies is a battle. Another battle may be fought upon the same field after a considerable interval; or a new battle may follow immediately, the armies meeting upon a new field. An action is brief and partial; a battle may last for days. Engagement is a somewhat formal expression for battle. A protracted war, including many battles, may be a stubborn contest. Combat, originally a hostile encounter between individuals, is now used also for extensive engagements. A skirmish is between small detachments or scattered troops. An encounter may be either purposed or accidental, between individuals or armed forces. Fight is a word of less dignity than battle; we should not ordinarily speak of Waterloo as a fight, unless where the word is used in the sense of fighting; as, I was in the thick of the fight. Antonyms: armistice, concord, peace, truce.

BE intr. verb [BEEN, BE-ING. Present indicative: AM, ART, IS, ARE; past: WAS, WAST, WAS, WERE] 1 To have existence, truth, or actuality; live: often with there; as, God is, there are bears in the zoo. 2 To exist (in a special state, relation, etc.); coincide in identity with; equal; fulfil (a following description); as, I am that man's brother, he is a rich man; also, to belong (to a specified group or category); as, that is an insect. 3 To take place; happen; as, the party is next week, can such things be? 4 To concern; signify; mean: with to; as, money is nothing to him. 5 To befall: with to or unto; as, joy be unto you. 6 To cost; as, the book is $2. 7 To have experience of; as, to be in pain. 8 To lie in or on; occupy (a certain place); as, London is in England, the picture is on page ten. 9 To stay; remain; as, she was with us a week; let the problem be. [<OE. bēon]

The proper case of a personal pronoun following be is the nominative, as the case is simply one of apposition, and the pronoun in apposition with the nominative must itself be in that case; as, It is I, it is he. But the reply "it's me" to the question "Who's there?" or "who is it?" is not now frowned upon either in America or in England except by grammatical purists. Be, as an auxiliary verb, is used with the present participle of other verbs to express continous or progressive action; as, I am working; with the past participle of transitive verbs to form the passive voice; as, he was injured; with the infinitive to express purpose, duty, possibility, etc.; as, we are to start on Monday; you are to do your lessons; the house is for rent.

BEAST MARRIAGE A common incident of folktale found all over the world in which a human being is married to a beast, in very primitive tales to an actual animal, in later elaborations to a human being doomed to exist in beast form until some woman will love him in that beastly shape. Often the human lover must also burn the sloughed skin in order to clinch the disenchantment. The stories fall into certain types: those in which the bewitched lover cannot return to human form until some woman's devotion proves stronger than the spell; those in which the lover takes an animal form himself to go awooing; those in which a deity assumes animal form and carries off a human bride, and those in which some animal by union with a human being becomes the ancestor of a tribe. The story exists in every country in Europe, China, Japan, Africa, and among some North American Indians. Perrault's Beauty and the Beast and Grimm's Frog Prince are famous versions; more modern is Keats' Lamia.

—adj. [Pop.] Fatigued, worn out. [<OE. beatan]

Synonyms (verb): bastinado, batter, belabor, bruise, castigate, chastise, conquer, cudgel, cuff, defeat, flog, overcome, pommel, pound, scourge, smite, strike, surpass, thrash, vanquish, whip, worst. Strike is the word for a single blow; to beat is to strike repeatedly. Others of the words above describe the manner of beating, as bastinado, to beat on the soles of the feet; belabor, to inflict an exhaustive beating; cudgel, to beat with a stick; thrash (originally identical with "thresh"), to beat with repeated blows, as wheat was beaten out with the old hand flail; to pound is to beat with a heavy, and pommel with a blunt, instrument. To batter and to bruise refer to the results of beating, that is battered which is broken or defaced by repeated blows; that is bruised which has suffered even one severe blow. To beat a combatant is to disable or dishearten him for further fighting. Hence beat becomes the synonym for every word which implies getting the advantage of another. Compare CONQUER, SUBDUE. Antonyms: fail, fall, surrender.

Synonyms: almsgiving, beneficence, benignity, bounty, charity, generosity, humanity, kind-heartedness, kindliness, kindness, liberality, munificence, philanthropy, sympathy. Originally beneficence was the doing well, benevolence the wishing or willing well to others; but benevolence has come to include beneficence and to displace it. Charity is now almost universally applied to some form of almsgiving and is much more limited in meaning than benevolence. Benignity suggests some occult power of blessing, such as was formerly ascribed to the stars; we may say a good man has an air of benignity. Kindness and tenderness are personal; benevolence and charity are general. Humanity is kindness and tenderness toward man or beast. We speak of the bounty of a generous host, the liberality or munificence of the founder of a college, or of the liberality of a person toward holders of conflicting beliefs. Philanthropy applies to wide schemes for human welfare, often, but not always, involving large expenditures in charity or benevolence. Compare MERCY. Antonyms: barbarity, brutality, churlishness, greediness, harshness, illiberality, inhumanity, malevolence, malignity, niggardliness, selfishness, self-seeking, stinginess, unkindness.

Synonyms: barrier, border, bound, bourn, bourne, confines, edge, enclosure, frontier, landmark, limit, line, marches, marge, margin, term, termination, verge. The boundary was originally the landmark, that which marked off one piece of territory from another. The bound is the limit, marked or unmarked. Now, however, the difference between the two words has come to be simply one of usage. As regards territory, we speak of the boundaries of a nation or of an estate; the bounds of a college, a ball-ground, etc. A barrier is something that bars ingress or egress. A barrier may be a boundary, as was the Great Wall of China for many centuries. Bourn, or bourne, is a poetical expression for bound or boundary. A border is a strip, as of land, along the boundary. Edge is a sharp terminal line, as where river or ocean meets the land. Limit is now used almost wholly in the figurative sense; as, the limit of discussion, of time, of jurisdiction. Line is a military term; as, within the lines, or through the lines, of an army. Compare barrier, end, margin.

BUS·I·NESS (bĭz′·ĭ·ness or bĭz′·ness) noun 1 A pursuit or occupation; trade; profession; calling; also, commercial affairs. 2 A matter or affair. 3 Interest; concern; duty. 4 A commercial enterprise or establishment. 5 Those details other than and exclusive of dialog, by which actors portray their parts and interpret a play. 6 [Obs.] The state of being busy: now busyness. —TO MEAN BUSINESS To be serious.

Synonyms: art, avocation, barter, calling, commerce, concern, craft, duty, employment, handicraft, industry, job, labor, occupation, profession, trade, trading, traffic, vocation, work. A business is what one follows regularly and for profit; an occupation is what he is engaged in, either continuously or temporarily, for any purpose, whether of profit, or of amusement, learning, philanthropy, etc. Pursuit is an occupation which one follows with ardor. A profession implies scholarship; as, the learned professions. A vocation or a calling is that to which one feels himself called, as by special fitness or sense of duty; an avocation is something that calls one away for a time from his vocation or business. A job is a piece of business viewed and paid for as a single undertaking; colloquially, any regular employment is often termed a job. Trade and commerce may be used as equivalents, but trade may have a more limited application; as, the trade of a village, the commerce of a nation; in the special sense, a trade is an occupation involving manual training and skilled labor. Barter is the direct exchange of commodities without use of money. Work is any application of energy to secure a result, or the result thus secured; we may speak of the work of an artist, or of a street-cleaner. A single branch of productive work is called an industry; as, the steel industry. Labor is ordinarily used, in this connection, for unskilled work; employment for work done in the service of another. Art in the industrial sense is a system of rules and methods for accomplishing some practical result; as, the art of printing; collectively, the arts. A craft is some occupation requiring technical skill or manual dexterity, or the persons, collectively, engaged in its exercise; as, the weaver's craft. Compare ACTION, DUTY, TRAFFIC, TRANSACTION, WORK. Antonyms: idleness, inaction, inactivity, indolence, leisure, unemployment, vacation.

BUS·TLING (bŭs′·ling) adj. Active; agitated. See synonyms under ACTIVE, ALERT, BUSY. — ·LY adv.

BUS·Y (biz′·i) adj. [BUS·I·ER, BUS·I·EST] 1 Intensely active; constantly or habitually occupied. 2 Temporarily engaged; not at leisure. 3 Officiously active; prying; meddling. 4 Pertaining to or filled with business. 5 Engaged: said of a telephone line or number.

— verb [BUS·IED, BUS·Y·ING] To make or be busy; keep employed; occupy (oneself). See synonyms under OCCUPY. [<OE. bysig, active]

Synonyms (adj.): active, assiduous, bustling, diligent, employed, engaged, industrious, occupied. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious reader. The assiduous worker gives patient and unremitting devotion to a task until it is done, or until nothing more can be done. Compare ACTIVE, INDUSTRIOUS, INDUSTRY. Antonyms: dilatory, dull, idle, inactive, indolent, lazy, listless, negligent, remiss, slack, slothful.

¹BUT conj. 1 Omitting or excluding the fact that; with the exception that; except. 2 Otherwise than (that); in every direction except (that); more than (that). 3 Still, on the contrary; yet, on the other hand; nevertheless; however. 4 Though it be true that; however that may be; notwithstanding; though; even if. 5 In addition to that; moreover; besides; again: approaching the meaning of and.

— prep. 1 Leaving out; with the exception of; except; barring. 2 Otherwise than.

— adv. 1 No otherwise than; no more than; only; merely; simply; as, she is but a child. 2 [Scot.] In or to the outer room or outer air; out. — TO BE BUT AND BEN WITH To live in close intimacy with.

— noun A verbal objection, exception, or condition; as, without any ifs or buts. [<OE. butan, except, without]

Synonyms (conj.): and, barely, besides, except, further, however, just, merely, moreover, nevertheless, notwithstanding, only, provided, save, still, that, though, unless, yet. But ranges from the faintest contrast to absolute negation; as, I am willing to go, but (on the other hand) content to stay; he is not an honest man, but (on the contrary) a villain. Except and excepting are slightly more emphatic than but. Such expressions as "words are but breath" (nothing but) may be referred to the restrictive use by ellipsis. But never becomes a full synonym for and; and adds something like, but adds something different; "brave and tender" implies that tenderness is natural to the brave; "brave but tender" implies that bravery and tenderness are rarely combined. Care must be employed in using but immediately followed by that when both words are conjunctions. There is no difficulty when but is a preposition and that is a pronoun; as, "I will take none but that," where the phrase means except that. The omission or insertion of but often reverses the meaning. "I have no fear that he will do it" and "I have no fear but that he will do it" have contrary senses, the former indicating the feeling of certainty that he will not do it, and the latter the feeling of certainty that he will do it. Where ambiguity or haziness results from the use of but that, it can ordinarily be avoided by recasting the sentence. Compare NOTWITHSTANDING.

BY prep. 1 Expressing relations of place or direction; of agency, cause, means, or instrument; of quantity; of time; or of an action to its object. 2 Expressing possession, order, arrangement, etc. 3 In accordance with; according to. 4 One point toward; as, to sail west by north. 5 In the name, presence, or view of: used in oaths or adjurations. 6 [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] Besides. —TO SET STORE BY To esteem; hold as valuable, important, or of worth. —TO STAND BY To stand up for; support; be loyal to; as, to stand by a friend.

—adv. 1 In the presence or vicinity; at hand; near; as, to stand by. 2 Up to and beyond something; past: of moving objects. 3 On one side; aside, as discarded or for future use; as, to lay something by; apart; off; up. 4 At an end; over; past, as, all that is by and gone. 5 At or into a person's house, store, etc.; as, to stop by. —TO STAND BY To be in the offing ready to come at call or need.

—noun 1 Something of minor or secondary importance; a side issue. 2 A goal, as in certain games. 3 In cricket, a run made on a ball missed by the batsman and which has passed by the wicket-keeper. 4 The condition of a person left without a competitor, as in tennis; an odd. 5 In golf, any hole or holes remaining unplayed when the match ends. Also BYE.

—adj. Bye; the adverb by used adjectively by some writers, now chiefly and properly in combination. [<OE. bi, big]

By is an element of many compounds, most of which are self-explaining in classes, in the sense of: at one side; inconspicuous; retired; as, by-alley, by-passage; incidental or secondary; as, by-act, by-aim; private or clandestine; sometimes, underhand; as, by-conference, by-design, by-gain; aside; as, by-glance, by-view; near; as, by-dweller, by-sitter.

Synonyms (prep.): through, with. By refers to the agent; through, to the means, cause, or condition; with, to the instrument. By commonly refers to persons; with, to things; through may refer to either. The road having become impassable through long disuse, a way was opened by pioneers with axes. By, however, may be applied to any object which is viewed as partaking of action and agency; as, the metal was corroded by the acid; skill is gained by practice. "His friends were displeased by the selection of another chairman" means that the action displeased them; "His friends were displeased with the selection," etc., means that the man selected was not their choice. Through implies a more distant connection than by or with, and more intervening elements. Material objects are perceived by the mind through the senses. By is in frequent use after call, judge, know, measure, perceive, see, seem, take, understand, etc., to indicate the determining object; as, to call by name; I judge by his dress that he is poor; I saw by his glance that he was a rogue. Accompanied and attended take by of persons, with (commonly) of things; we say, surrounded by.

Synonyms: account, compute, consider, count, deem, enumerate, estimate, number, rate, reckon. Number is the generic term. To count is to number one by one. To calculate is to use more complicated processes, as multiplication, division, etc. Compute allows more of the element of probability, which is still more strongly expressed by estimate; as, to estimate the cost of a proposed building. To enumerate is to mention item by item; as, to enumerate one's grievances. To rate is to estimate by comparison, as if the object were one of a series. We count upon a desired future; we do not count upon the undesired. As applied to the present we reckon or count a thing precious or worthless. Compare ESTEEM.

— ECCLESIASTICAL CALENDAR A luni–solar calendar for regulating the dates of church feasts: in both Catholic and Protestant usage.
— GREGORIAN CALENDAR The calendar now in general use in most parts of the world; first prescribed in 1582 by Pope Gregory XIII to correct the Julian year to the solar year; adopted in England Sept. 3/14, 1752, the first being the Old Style (O.S.) date and the last being the New Style (N.S.). Thus, although George Washington's birthday is commemorated on February 22, he was born on February 11, 1732, by the Old Style calendar.
— HEBREW CALENDAR The present–day calendar of the Jews, based on a lunar month, and adjusted to the solar year by intercalating the month Veadar between Adar and Nisan 7 times in a 19 year cycle. The months, having alternately 30 and 29 days, are Tishri, Heshwan, Kislew, Tebet, Shebat, Adar, Nisan, Iyyar, Siwan, Tammuz, Ab, and Elul; Heshwan and Kislew, however, may add or lose a day respectively as needed. The year now begins on Tishri 1, though anciently it began in Nisan. The Hebrew calendar reckons the creation at 3760 years 3 months B.C.
— HINDU CALENDAR A solar calendar, reckoned in 12 months, each beginning when the sun enters a new sign of the zodiac.
— JULIAN CALENDAR The calendar prescribed by Julius Cæsar, which, though using the bissextile year, was in error one day in 128 years. The months, after some changes by Augustus, had the length now in use in Europe and America.
— MOHAMMEDAN CALENDAR A lunar calendar of 12 months dating from A.D. 622 (July 15), the year of the Hegira. There is no seasonal intercalation the seasons retrogressing in a period of 32½ years. The names of the months, alternately 29 and 30 days, are Muharram (30 days), Saphar, Rabia 1, Rabia 2, Jomada 1, Jomada 2, Rajab, Shaaban, Ramadan, Shawwal, Dulkaada, and Dulheggia.
— PERPETUAL CALENDAR A calendar by which the day of the week for any given date may be ascertained during a widely extended period of time.

One method follows: (1) Take the last two figures of the year, add ¼ of them, neglecting the remainder; (2) Add 1, if the date is in January or October; 2, in May; 3, in August; 4, in February, March, or November; 5, in June; 6, in September or December; 0, in April or July; if leap year (that is, if divisible by 4 without remainder, and not by 100): 0, in January; 3, in February. (3) Add day of month. Divide the sum of these three by 7, and the remainder gives the number of the day of the week. For example: September 3, 1939, was a Sunday. 39 + 9 = 48; September = 6; Date = 3. 48 + 6 + 3 = 57. 57 ÷ 7 = 8, which is Sunday, the eighth (or first) day of the week. This applies only to the years 1900–99. For the years 1700–99 add 4; for 1800–99 add 2; for 2000–99 add 6; but before 1752 the Old Style was used.

— REPUBLICAN or REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR The calendar instituted on Oct. 5, 1793, by the first French Republic, and abolished Dec. 31, 1805. Its scheme divided the year into 12 months of 30 days each, with five (in leap years, six) supplementary days (sansculottides) at the end of the last month. The first year (Year I) began Sept. 22, 1792. The months were: Vendémiaire, Brumaire, Frimaire, Nivose, Pluviose, Ventose, Germinal, Floréal, Prairial, Messidor, Thermidor (or Fervidor), and Fructidor.
— ROMAN CALENDAR A lunar calendar, attributed to Numa. The day of the new moon was the calends, and the day of the full moon the ides (the 13th or 15th of the month). Days were reckoned backward from these dates and from the nones, ninth day before the ides by inclusive reckoning.
— WORLD CALENDAR A proposed reformed calendar designed to equalize the lengths of the quarters of the year, each to have one month of 31 and two of 30 days. It provides for extra days to conform to solar time.

Synonyms (adj.): collected, composed, cool, dispassionate, imperturbable, peaceful, placid, quiet, sedate, self-controlled, self-possessed, serene, smooth, still, tranquil, undisturbed, unruffled. That is calm which is free from disturbance or agitation; in the physical sense, free from violent motion or action; in the mental or spiritual sense, free from excited or disturbing emotion or passion. We speak of a calm sea, a placid lake, a serene sky, a still night, a quiet day, a quiet home. We speak, also, of still waters, smooth sailing, which are different modes of expressing freedom from manifest agitation. Cool, in this connection, always suggests the recognition of some form of danger or risk. One may be calm by assured superiority to danger, by ignorance of its existence or of its magnitude, or by indifference to the result, or by the apathy of hopelessness, as we speak of the calmness of despair; one is cool who, while intensely alive to danger or need, has all his faculties concentrated on the means of meeting or overcoming it, a calm boxer would probably be an easy victim, while a cool boxer would be a dangerous antagonist. Cool is stronger than composed or collected. One is composed who has subdued excited feeling, he is collected when he has every thought, feeling, or perception awake and at command. Tranquil refers to a present state, placid to a prevailing tendency. We speak of a tranquil mind, a placid disposition. The serene spirit dwells as if in the clear upper air, above all storm or agitation. See PACIFIC, SOBER. Antonyms: agitated, boisterous, disturbed, excited, fierce, frantic, frenzied, furious, heated, passionate, raging, roused, ruffled, stormy, turbulent, violent, wild, wrathful.

—noun In printing and bookbinding, the striking or cutting out, omission, or suppression of a leaf, leaves, or any part of any printed matter or work; also, any printed matter thus suppressed, or the matter substituted for that stricken out. [<F. canceller <L. cancelli, little lattice]

Synonyms (verb): abolish, abrogate, annul, discharge, efface, erase, expunge, nullify, obliterate, quash, remove, repeal, rescind, revoke, vacate. Cancel, efface, erase, expunge, and obliterate have as their first meaning the removal of written characters or other forms of record. To cancel is, literally, to make a lattice by cross-lines, exactly our English cross out; to efface is to rub off, smooth away the face of, as of an inscription; to expunge is to punch out with some sharp instrument, so as to show that the words are no longer part of the writing, to obliterate is to cover over or remove, as a letter, as was done by reversing the Roman stylus, and rubbing out with the rounded end what had been written with the point on the waxen tablet. What has been canceled, erased, expunged, may perhaps still be traced, what is obliterated is gone forever, as if it had never been. The figurative use of the words keeps close to the primary sense. Compare ABOLISH, ANNUL. Antonyms: approve, confirm, enact, enforce, establish, maintain, perpetuate, record, reenact, sustain, uphold.
